SPECIAL ABILITIES

Flying Grapple (Ex) If a flying asherake hits a Medium or smaller opponent with both claws, the asherake can start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. An asherake who gets a hold usually flies off with the victim, preferably to be added to the ranks of asherake slaves or dropped from a height.

The feared asherake are a loathsome race of flying tigerlike humanoids. They stand about 7 feet tall, are covered with thick fur, and have wings that spread out 10 feet. They are intelligent and organized, and their society is hierarchical and highly advanced. The origin of the asherake is not clear. Some say that they hail from a far off plane, while others claim they evolved from distant jungles from hungry beasts. Whatever the explanation, the asherake are here to stay.

Asherake are typically raiders, their floating ships attacking a town and carrying off its inhabitants. Asherake always begin combat by dropping a few dozen slaves onto the town in an attempt to demoralize the defenders. These slaves dropped from a great height for maximum effect. This same tactic is used if the asherake are attacking a military unit, except that the dropped slaves are used as missile weapons to flatten the opposing troops. Falling bodies inflict 1d6 damage for every 20 feet they fall. Typically asherake drop the slaves from 200 feet, for 10d6 points of damage. After the bombardment, the asherake swoop down and attempt to carry off slaves, using their flying grapple ability. If melee is necessary, or if the asherake fight with flying opponents, they prefer bastard swords to their natural weapons.

If higher level asherake are present, they direct troops and relay orders from the captain, who usually remains on the ship, using his magic to immobilize and bind captured opponents. Asherake sorcerers also remain with their ship, casting fireball or stinking cloud spells from portholes at the town or troops below.
Asherake Society
The foundation of asherake culture is the principle that all other races are inferior and subservient to them. Their colonies spread like plagues over the land, and they overrun and enslave anyone in their path. Asherake make their homes in huge black flying ships, kept aloft by some arcane magic. These blasted hulks with tattered sails and rank upon rank of black oars are filled with snarling asherake, who attack land-based populations and carry them off to a life of bitter servitude. No one has ever gone into the center of their lands and returned, but it is rumored that they are ruled from a mountain kingdom by a mad emperor.

As asherake rarely have peaceful contact with other races, little is understood about their society. It is known that they speak their own language, which has a 30 character alphabet, and is oddly similar to Dover. Asherake almost never learn other languages as they have no respect for other cultures. They do know basic commands in Common, which they find useful for giving orders to their slaves. Slaves who manage to escape from their ships say that the asherake are extremely cruel masters; slaves rarely survive more than a year in servitude.

Asherake soldiers are highly organized, and all quite mindful of rank. They perform no labor of their own except for killing and enslaving. All of their needs are catered to by slaves of all races, who feed them, clean for them, manufacture their armor and clothes, entertain them, man the oars on the ships, and even serve as meals for the asherake when no prey population is available. One odious asherake habit is to fatten humans through overfeeding, keeping them in small, tight pens. Refusal to eat is punished by death. Once a poor soul has fattened to a gross degree, he is used as the main course at a sacred asherake feast.

The one exception to the slave labor rule is weapon crafting. The asherake never let any slave touch a weapon upon penalty of death. Asherake are quite proud of their weaponsmiths, and the weapons they create are of the highest quality.

Asherake have their own religion, which seems to be the driving force behind their actions. Their chief god, Baraka, is worshipped as the god of mastery, and all other gods are viewed as servants to him.

Each flying ship is captained by a priest of Baraka who directs its course and actions. These ships levitate by inherent enchantments and are propelled through the air by huge oars manned by slaves. Each ship holds an entire crew of asherake (see organization). Asherake navies are led by a flagship manned by two crews and a 15th level sorcerer admiral.

SPECIAL ABILITIES

Anti-Poison (Ex) Bite – save Fort DC 20; frequency 1/round for 5 rounds; effect heals 2d8; cure 1 save; The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spawn (Su) After 4 rounds of continuous combat, the kahrn can, as a full-round action, attempt to reproduce. The spawn forms as a bud on its back, which spurs open the following round, producing a larval kahrn. The creature can use this ability only once every six months.

Kahrn are creatures of evolved to live and thrive in an environment of violence. Asexual creatures, these magical beasts draw energy from combat with other sentient creatures in which to fuel their own propagation. They are not mindless beasts though and will often take the time to evaluate a foe at a distance to determine if it can provide them with the energy they need before attacking.

For obvious reasons, the kahrn seeks out combat. It has no interest in fighting an opponent it cannot defeat. In combat, it usually refrains from using its bite. However, if a weak opponent appears to be faltering, the kahrn uses the healing poison in its bite to restore and sustain it, so it can continue to fight. The kahrn will never use its bite on an obviously superior foe.

Kahrn larvae look like smaller versions of the parents. They feed on combat like adults, and they are born hungry, eager to join in the battle that gave them life. They are about 4 feet high and 3 feet long. Their hairless bodies are covered in moist grey flesh. After about a year, the larvae mature into adults, but they are forced to fend for themselves immediately. Their rend attack inflicts only 2d3 points of damage. They have no venom, nor can they create spawn.

ABOUT JEWEL GOLEMS
CONSTRUCTING JEWEL GOLEMS

The cost listed for jewel golems includes all materials and spell components that are consumed or become a permanent part of it.

The first step in the creation of a jewel golem is the selection and enchantment of the birthing gem, from which the golem’s physical body will eventually be crafted. In game terms, this requires a character of the appropriate level, possessing the Craft Construct feats. The initial preparation of the birthing gem requires two weeks of work, during which the creator must spend at least 8 hours each day in a specially prepared laboratory or workroom, in which (among other things) a circle of carefully aligned mirrors is used to focus solar and lunar energy into the birthing gem. This chamber is similar to an alchemist’s laboratory and costs 500 gp to establish.

In addition, this preparation process consumes 1/10th of the total cost of the golem in question. Only the most exceptional of gems are capable of focusing the intense mystic energies that form the heart of a jewel golem. Lesser stones, or flawed stones, will shatter during the preparation process, but only after consuming the preparation cost.

Once the birthing gem has been prepared, the true work of creating the golem can begin. An extensive process of magical rituals, requiring two additional months to complete, must be performed. During this time, the gem is used as a crystalline matrix from which the body of the jewel golem is spontaneously created. In addition, the elemental spirit that powers the golem is gathered and bound to the evolving structure of the golem’s body.

During this period, when not working on the rituals, the creator must rest and can perform no other activities except eating, sleeping, or talking. Interruption of this work for any reason will cause the creator to lose control of the arcane energies he is attempting to harness, destroying the birthing gem and forcing him to start from scratch if he wishes to continue. Note, however, that once the birthing gem is prepared, the creator can wait as long as he likes before using that gem to actually construct a jewel golem. A gem prepared by one person can even be used by another person.

Controlling Jewel Golems

There are two types of jewel golem: controlled and free.

A jewel golem’s creator can command a controlled golem if it is within 60 feet and can see and hear its creator. If uncommanded, a controlled golem usually follows its last instruction to the best of its ability, though if attacked it returns the attack. The creator can give the golem a simple program to govern its actions in his or her absence, such as “Remain in this area and attack all creatures that enter” (or only a specific type of creature), “Ring a gong and attack,” or the like.

However, jewel golems are generally more intelligent than traditional golems, allowing them to carry out more complex tasks. A jewel golem becomes free in one of two ways: if one is separated from its master for more than 3 months without an active command — or if its master dies while the golem does not have an active command — it will automatically become free and capable of pursuing its own goals. If, however, it is separated from its master for more than 3 months — or its master dies while it has an active command — the jewel golem must make an Intelligence check once per year against a DC equal to the caster level of its master in order to become a free golem.
There are several exceptions to this: the aquamarine and opal golems are never controlled — they begin their existence as free golems. Diamond and pearl golems are always considered controlled, unless their master specifically gives them their freedom. Moonstone golems are constantly contesting their control — they make an Intelligence check at the moment of their creation, and will continue to make Intelligence checks every year until they are successfully free, against a DC equal to the caster level of their master. It is rumored, however, that certain “free” moonstone golems are still controlled by some greater imperative. Bloodstone golems are also a special case: they will obey the commands of anyone associated with the holy site they are guarding, unless those orders interfere with their ability to protect the holy site. They can only become free golems if the holy site is completely destroyed, at which point they must make an Intelligence check against a DC equal to the caster level of their master. It is rumored, however, that certain “free” moonstone golems are still controlled by some greater imperative.

Ogrillons are a fierce half-ogre race born of a union between a female orc and a male ogre. They tend to act like ogres, but they are far more violent and aggressive than their larger kin. Ogrillons are usually only slightly taller than orcs, with features that strongly favor their orc parent — so much so that most ogrillons are indiscernible from normal orcs. Ogrillons love nothing more than combat. They are a race so inborn to be warriors that they seem almost depressed and dejected when they are not involved in melee. They only time an ogrillon laughs is when it is the center of a whirlwind of melee and covered in its opponent’s blood. Ogrillons do not care for armor or weapons and in fact carry very little gear at all. They do, however, like gold pieces and usually keep a few in a filthy pouch with other shiny trinkets as lucky charms.

Ogrillons disdain the use of armor, relying solely on their natural armor to protect them. They also disdain the use of weapons, preferring to leap headlong into a fray with fists swinging madly.

Ogrillon Society
Ogrillons have no society to call their own. Since they are born of female orcs, ogrillon children are generally raised in orc clans. Their size, strength, and ferocity... are welcomed by the orcs, and ogrillons usually occupy a place of reverence in an orc clan. Ogrillons, of course, think little of the admiration of their orc kin. Battle is the only thought that regularly enters the ogrillon mind.

Bleeding Strike (Ex) When a reaper falcon deals a critical hit with its wing bones it deals an additional 1d4 points of bleed damage.

Reaper falcons are fearless hunters. They are known that their razor sharp wing bones can slice through any foe in their path. They know that virtually any creature can offer them a meal, though they are rarely interested in fighting for the sake of fighting. Fiercely loyal to their mates, one will always fight to the death if their mate is killed. They also make stalwart animal companions.

Variant Reaper Falcons: Some reaper falcons possess the ability to dismember an opponent on a critical hit. Mechanically any creature dealt a critical hit by the reaper falcon would immediately lose 25% of their maximum hit points and one limb. If the damage reduces the creature to 0 hit points or less, it is decapitated and dies instantly. Reaper falcons with the dismemberment special ability cannot be trained as animal companions.
