A D20 System Sourcebook of Monstrous Proportion

Wormsmiths
Rob Baxter • Colin Chapman • Andrew Flynn • Brett Huffman
J. Michael Klimartin • Joseph Miller • Doug Seacat • Matt Staroscik
Jon Thompson • Matt Wilson

Editorial overseers
Brett Huffman • J. Michael Klimartin • Jon Thompson

Illumination Mechanics
Brian Dolomites Snoddy • Matt Wilson

Special Guest Illuminators
Brian Despain • Tony DiTerlizzi • Chippy Dugan • Scott Fischer
Gerald Lee • Ron Spencer

Visual Design Architect
Mike South

4,000th Steamjack
Matt Staroscik

Production Foreman
Etien Staroscik

This work is dedicated to the most amazing collection of freelance writers ever assembled—a group of talented individuals who have laboured far beyond the call of duty, all in the name of creativity. Without them, this endeavour could never have achieved its full potential. Doug, Joe, Brett, Colin, Jon, Joseph, Andrew and Rob—Privateer Press is eternally grateful for your contributions and your dedication. We are more than the sum of our parts.
Table of Contents

It has been twenty-five years since I came across a tattered manual on some University bookshelf entitled the "Tome of Beasts," penned by some age-forgotten author known simply as Holden. I was young and filled with dreams of adventure and invincibility in those days. I'm rather embarrassed to admit I tucked that dusty old scrapbook under my arm and promptly lifted it from the University's possession (it is still in my collection today), and after devouring every tawdry bit of it, embarked on my first monster hunt. In your hands you hold the gemstone of my many notes and experiences collected over the past two decades. Herein you will find detailed observations and revelations of creatures both breathtaking and nightmarish. I have strived to be as accurate as possible in my descriptions and my research, but cannot guarantee the accuracy of each and every note of this tome. Still, I hope you will find this Monsternopedia as valuable and as essential as I have found Holden's aged but indispensable "Tome of Beasts."

---

Professor Viktor Pendrake, Royal Cymruan University, 601 A.R.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Animations</th>
<th>4</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gear Wyrm</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rip Cutter</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chain Runner</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Argus | .8 |
| Assasin Fly | .10 |
| Black Ogryn | .12 |
| Bosman | .14 |
| Progeny | .18 |

| Beg Trog | .20 |
| Bridge Trog | .22 |
| Sorrow-Mawg | .24 |
| Buzzard Beetle | .26 |
| Cask Imp | .28 |
| Cephalys | .30 |
| Crypt Spider | .32 |
| Deathjack | .36 |
| Disembodied | .38 |
| Dismantle | .40 |
| Dracodile | .42 |

| Dragons | .44 |
| Scrafaung | .56 |
| Bletherghast | .58 |
| Halfing | .60 |
| Dragonspawn | .62 |
| The Blighted | .66 |

| Dread | .68 |
| Droog | .70 |
| Dane Powder | .72 |
| Eidarch | .74 |
| Sylph | .76 |

| Exterminator | .82 |
| Exterminator | .84 |
| Exterminator | .86 |
| Grizzle & Hay | .88 |

| Guardian Giant | .92 |
| Hallowed | .94 |
| Hull Grind | .96 |
| Huck | .98 |

| Infernal, Curator | .102 |
| Infernal, Soul Stalker | .106 |
| Infernal, Umbra Reaver | .108 |

| Umbra Assassin | .110 |
| Umbra Sorceror | .112 |
| Umbra Warrior | .114 |

| Iron Lich | .118 |
| Iron Maken | .120 |
| Kaemp | .122 |

| Medagangyle | .124 |
| Mechanithall | .126 |
| Moonwing | .128 |

| Nyss | .130 |
| Oasis Ooze | .132 |
| Ogron | .134 |

| Old Man of the Swamp | .136 |
| Onkor | .138 |
| Pistol Wraith | .140 |
| Reclaw Buffalo | .142 |
| Rusalka | .144 |
| Sagu | .146 |
| Satyrlyx | .148 |

| Scoocher | .150 |
| Sepulchral Lurker | .152 |
| Shaft Wight | .154 |
| Skipp | .156 |

| Skorne | .158 |
| Spine Ripper | .160 |
| Steamling | .162 |
| Tatzylwurm | .164 |
| Tarn | .166 |

| Thornwood Mauler | .168 |
| Thrall | .170 |

| Thrall Risen | .172 |
| Thrall Guardian | .174 |
| Thrall Lieutenant | .176 |

| Tomb Maiden | .178 |
| Totem Hunter | .180 |
| Trapperkin | .184 |

| Trolls | .186 |

| Troll | .200 |
| Whelp, Mature | .204 |

| Whelp, Immature | .206 |
| Dire Troll | .210 |

| Pygmy Troll | .212 |
| Black Troll | .214 |

| Trollkin | .216 |
| Urtbek | .218 |
| Vekkiss | .220 |

| Warg Wolf | .224 |
| Wieldwarden | .226 |
| Wyldgeist | .228 |

| Appendix | .230 |
| Legend & Lore | .232 |

| Torment of Lore | .234 |
| Quickplates | .236 |

| Abha Hunter | .238 |

| Bloodthirsty | .240 |
| Crafty | .242 |
| Deepsweller | .244 |
| Holy | .246 |
| Maligned | .248 |

| Stealthy | .250 |
| Tough | .252 |
| Urban | .254 |

| Professor Viktor Pendrake | .256 |

| Prestige Classes | .258 |
| Adventuring Scholar | .260 |
| Bone Grind | .262 |

| Monster Hunter | .264 |

| Cosmology & Internals | .266 |
| Playable Races | .268 |

| Dwavres | .270 |
| Elves | .272 |
| Goblin | .274 |

| Gobbers | .276 |

| Gorgon | .278 |

| Gorgondur | .280 |

| Grizzle & Hay | .282 |

|Grizzle & Hay | .284 |
|Grizzle & Hay | .286 |

|Grizzle & Hay | .288 |
|Grizzle & Hay | .290 |
Animatons

Animation: Gear Wyrm

Large Construct

- Hit Dice: 4d10 (22 hp)
- Initiative: +4 (+4 Dex)
- Speed: 20 ft.
- AC: 21 (+4 Dex, +8 natural, -1 size)
- Attacks: Bite +8 melee
- Damage: Bite 1d8+7
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 10 ft./5 ft.
- Special Attacks: Energy discharge 1d4-1, greater dispelling, trample 1d8+7
- Special Qualities: Absolute magic resistance, construct, hardness 10, null field, -40 ft. radius, spell consumption

- Saves: Fort +1, Ref +5, Will -4
- Abilities: Str 20, Dex 18, Con —, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1

- Climate/Terrain: Any land
- Organization: Solitary
- Challenge Rating: 4
- Alignment: Always neutral
- Advancement:
  - 1–3 HD (Medium-size);
  - 4–10 HD (Large); 11–20 HD (Huge)

Animation: Rip Cutter

Medium-size Construct

- Hit Dice: 6d10 (33 hp)
- Initiative: +7 (+7 Dex)
- Speed: 30 ft.
- AC: 22 (+7 Dex, +5 natural)
- Attacks: 2 chains +11 melee
- Damage: Chain 2d6+7
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
- Special Attacks: Chains, constric, greater dispelling, improved grab
- Special Qualities: Absolute magic resistance, construct, hardness 15, null field, 60 ft. radius, spell consumption

- Saves: Fort +2, Ref +9, Will -3
- Abilities: Str 20, Dex 24, Con —, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1

- Climate/Terrain: Any land
- Organization: Solitary
- Challenge Rating: 7
- Alignment: Always neutral
- Advancement:
  - 7–10 HD (Medium-size);
  - 11–15 HD (Large)

---

My good friend, the wizard Thain Raleah, is a fearsome opponent when something raises his ire, and there's not much in this world that he would shy away from. I once watched him slay a Thornwood mudcat without casting a single spell, and he even defused a temple of Garse, avoiding an entire band of angry priests, just so he could study some petty artifact. He may even fearlessly fought out the dreaded Deathdeck for a year, but to no avail (and lucky for him, I'd say). But when I went to him inquiring of a strange band of constructs called animatons, his face went pale and his tone dropped immediately.

He told me the tale of a small branch of the Fraternal Order of Wizardry located in Fellig. They had been assaulted by one of these creatures after a brother was conducting unsanctioned experiments in a nearby scrap yard. Two of the five resident wizards were lost to the creature and two others permanently scarred; the survivor—responsible for the creature—hasn't been heard from since.

As Thain explained to me, they are not living creatures, nor creations of any intelligent being. They are strange constructs born of latent magical energy and are the ultimate bane of all who tamper with magic or wield enchanted devices. Under certain circumstances—which are not entirely understood—magical residue can animate pieces of worked metal, usually in the form of debris, into certain recurring forms. Fields of energy that completely suppress magic surround such animators, and they have even further abilities that can cause permanent loss of magical enchantment.

Though I've heard tell of others, there are several more common recurring forms of animator, each with slightly varying abilities. I have heard primarily of three varieties: the large and serpentine gear wyrm, the bizarre rip cutter (which resembles a pile of flailing chucks wearing a suit of armor), and the small but deadly chain runner (a humanoid form, composed largely of chain and wire). Though they each have their own distinctions, the visage of a walking pile of junk is a haunting one indeed.

They are all universal in their basic behavior, which seems to be seeking out and feeding on magical energies. This is how the branch in Pellig was assaulted and damaged so horribly; the wizards present were rendered impotent and unable to save their home.

They tried to defend it with physical force, but in this regard the animator was exploiting their weakness. Unfortunately, only a few men occupied the Pellig site at the time, and the assaulting animator seemed to be of greater power than is usual.

I've never heard tell of an animator demonstrating any real intelligence, but there seems to be a certain "instinctive" behavior pattern present in all. This is what piqued my interest in them most, as I had hoped it might shed light on my theories on instinctive behavior in living creatures. However, study has been slow. These constructs are exceedingly rare, usually only occurring in places where great magical energies have been wrought. I have encountered a few among the junk-strewn battlefields along the Imil-Khor for border, as well as in a few scattered ruins, but in all cases my companions and I had to put the terrors down before they ran amuck.

Combat

The following abilities are common to all animators.

Absolute Magic Resistance (Su): All spells cast upon or which would otherwise directly affect an animator have no effect on it whatsoever, and no amount of spell strength may overcome this.

Greater Dispelling (Su): All animators may cast dispel magic as will, as a normal action. They cast this as 7th-level wizards; however, they receive a competency bonus to the die roll equal to their hit dice. Furthermore, if they exceed the defending DC by 15 or more, there is a 1% chance per HD of the animator that the dispelling will become permanent—if cast upon an item, that item loses its magical properties; if cast upon a target affected by a spell, that spell may never affect that target again; if cast as a counterspell, that spell is permanently removed from the caster's spell list; creatures using spell-like abilities lose those abilities; and so on. To remove this effect one must have restoration cast by either a cleric of Morros with Ascendant Corben as a patron or a cleric of Thamar with the Magic domain.

(Do note that, though an animator may recast a spell, it does not comprehend what is going on. It uses this ability out of instinct and reflex—so it won't target specific items, etc., intentionally.)

Null Field (Su): All animators are surrounded by field that nullifies all magic within a radius of 10 feet per HD. Double...
Animaton: Chain Runner
Small Construct
Hit Dice: 1d10 (55 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+5 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 23 (+1 size, +7 Dex, +5 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +13 melee
Damage: Slam 1d4 + 1
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.
Special Attacks: Superior dispelling
Special Qualities: Absolute magic resistance, construct, hardness 20, null field 200 ft., radius, spell consumption, spell turning
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +8, Will +2
Abilities: Str 21, Dex 21, Con —,
Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1

Climate/Terrain: Any land
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 10
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 11–13 HD (Small); 14–18 HD (Medium–size)

that in the case of the chain runner). It functions identically to an antismage field spell, with the exception that it does not suppress any of the animators own abilities.

Spell Consumption (Su): Any time an animaton successfully dispels any magic effect, either by dispel magic or by its null field, it gains 1 per effective spell level per item or target affected. This includes suppressing spell effects and magic items, and multiple items being suppressed or dispelled simultaneously are cumulative (so a party of adventurers brimming with magical items that walks into, or out of and back into, its null field is likely to heal it completely). Do note that animators are not smart enough to heal themselves intentionally this way.

Gear Wyrm

Gear wyrms are the most base of all animators and seem to possess the least amount of instinct. Generally, they slither and roll about looking for nourishment and attacking anything that comes near it. They use their dispel abilities less often and frequently employ physical attacks.

Energy Discharge (Su): Whenever a gear wyrm is struck by a physical blow, the magical energies it has consumed burst forth slightly, in the form of crackling blue lightning that affects all in its threatened area for 1d4+1 damage. All creatures, except that which made the affecting attack, may make a Reflex save (DC 10) for half damage. Creatures immune to lightning are not immune to this effect (it’s not true lightning), though spell resistance functions equivalent to hardness (of equal numerical value) against it.

Trample (Ex): A gear wyrm may roll over and effectively trample any Small size or smaller opponents for 1d8+7 bonus points of damage. Victims who don’t make an attack of opportunity may make a Reflex save (DC 16) for half damage.

Rip Cutter

Rip cutters use a combination of physical and dispelling attacks. They display a surprising amount of instinct when it comes to wielding the many chains that hang from their bodies.

Chains (Ex): The rip cutter wields its chains as if it had the Weapon Finesse feat, and it may perform all of the special moves normally allowed with such a weapon, except that it may never drop them.

Constrict (Ex): With a successful grapple check, a rip cutter deals 1d4+5 damage to any grappled opponent of Medium-size or smaller.

Improved Grab (Ex): For this to take effect, the rip cutter must start a successful grapple check.
cessful attack with one of its chains. It may then attempt to constrict the victim.

Chain Runner

Although they are simple-looking constructs, chain runners demonstrate a surprising instinctual cunning. They rely almost entirely on their dispelling abilities, seeking out and attempting to permanently debilitate spell-wielding beings. They tend to avoid physical combat.

Spell Turning (Su): Any spell cast upon a chain walker from outside of its null field is instantly reflected upon the caster once it reaches the null field (it bounces off of it, so to speak).

Superior Dispelling (Su): Chain runners dispel magic even more effectively than other animatons. They need only exceed a target DC by 10 to threaten with permanent dispelling. Furthermore, the odds of permanent dispelling occurring jump to 20% per HD.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: It is known that there is a rare type of construct that can arise without a builder's hand, though only of formerly crafted metal parts.

UNCOMMON: Animatons are animated and powered by latent magical energy. They possess the unique ability to suppress magical energies.

RARE: They lack intelligence, but possess a haunting amount of instinctual "programming," which can make them deadly opponents, especially to those who employ magic. However, those who do not possess any form of enchantment or enchanted item are ignored by an animaton unless they provoke it.

OBSCURE: There are rumors that a particularly clever underground band of elves have been performing experiments to bring an animaton into being. Thus far they have been unsuccessful, but they theorize that if they can replicate the conditions of their genesis, they can unleash one of their own.

Treasure

Parts taken from a destroyed animaton may be used as a material component in a dispel magic spell, granting the caster a +5 enhancement bonus to the dispel check (parts are used up in the casting). These parts may also be used as components of magical items that have (only) dispelling or antimagic effects. Items made of these parts cost half the XP to create.

Animaton pieces are also prized by scholars and wizards who wish to study them. Raw pieces may sell for anywhere from 100 to 5000 gp, depending on size and condition, though wizards seeking parts for magical items might pay far more.

Hooks

An estranged wizard out of Five Fingers has decided he wishes to perform some experiments upon an animaton. He is currently searching for someone to help him create one, although doing so might prove a high impossible task because of their peculiar resistances. Rumor has it that this is the brother behind the flying disco, and he is looking to redeem himself.

"This walking pile of junk ain't worth my enchanted Bow of the Great Avenger has never let me down. My bow has never... shudders" — Allown Eberch, Cygnaranbound, now short one magical bow.
Argus

Medium-size Magical Beast

Hit Dice: 3d10+3 (20 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 14 (+2 Dex, +2 natural)
Attacks: 2 bites +5 melee
Damage: Bite 1d6+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Doppler bark, grappling bite
Special Qualities: Scent
Saves: Fort +4, Ref +5, Will +1
Abilities: Str 14, Dex 14, Con 13,
Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 10
Skills: Hide +5, Listen +6, Spot +5,
Swim +3
Feats: Alertness
Climate/Terrain: Any land
Organization: Solitary, brace (2), or pack
(5–10)
Challenge Rating: 3
Alignment: Usually neutral
Advancement: 4–6 HD (Medium-size); 7–9
HD (Large)

During a trip in the northern lands of Khador a number of years back I was called upon by an old friend to help the Khadoran Free Soldiers League dispatch a slaving ring run by black ogres. It wasn't the type of thing I usually get into, but I owed this friend a couple of debts, so I joined in. The slaves had raided many villages, and the cruelty of the ogres had caused much suffering. All told, I helped rescue over a hundred souls from their iron mines. Geminus, an argus pup, was a gift from the soldiers' league for helping them.

I'd never raised nor trained such a feral animal, but I'd convinced myself that I could do it (despite the warnings of the soldiers who gave it to me). Raising that damn dog became one of the hardest things I ever did. But it was also one of the most rewarding. Geminus was a magnificent, persistent, strong, fearless, and as stubborn as a donkey. He passed away only two summers ago, and I still sorely miss his company on my travels.

The most notable thing about an argus is that it has two heads, which enables it to do several things at once. So it can track and guard at the same time, eat and sleep at the same time, or even rip your sofa to pieces while doing the same to your entomology textbooks! Both of its heads have distinct personalities, and it is perhaps the only creature I have ever met that is good at keeping its own company. They have short thick fur, usually colored a dark brown to a glossy black.

The argus dogs were first found as marauding packs in Khador. It wasn't long before specimens made their way into shows and noble houses to act as guard beasts, and the argus is now even the official symbol of the Khadoran Free Soldiers League. The elite trackers and rangers of the league are often trained to handle these dogs. These hardened men have wept openly at the loss of their canine charges, so valued are the dogs among them.

The argus is a dangerous animal when found in the wild.
They are incredibly intelligent, and groups of them are deadly. The packs can communicate with a series of yips and yowls and employ all of the breed's distinct abilities to bring down prey. Wild argus hunt in pairs or packs and have a very strict hierarchy. A pack will often stalk their prey for days before moving in for the kill.

Combat

An argus is typically used as a tracking dog or traveling companion. It is usually commanded to bark and then attack those who assault its handler. An argus on the attack stuns its prey with its bark and then takes the prey to the ground with its grappling bite.

Doppler Bark (Su): The doppler bark is a fear-based cone attack that paralyzes its prey. The cone extends 25 feet from the argus. Anyone caught in the cone must make a Will save (DC 12) or be paralyzed in confusion for 1d3 rounds. It may do this once per day.

Grappling Bite (Ex): If an argus manages to successfully attack with both bites, it begins to tear apart its prey with its jaws. Treat this as an improved grab. It may use this against creatures Large or smaller. However, since both jaws are used in doing this, it gains no attacks and may only grapple while it uses this ability.

Treasure

In most places the argus itself is treasure enough. A pregnant argus bitch can fetch as much as 1000 gp. Pups are worth around 250 gp apiece. In Khador the military values these dogs immensely. There is a standing bounty on bringing in live argus (100 gp), and bringing in wild ones will fetch you double or triple depending on their size. Injured specimens will be healed by beast-tenders; the cost of healing is usually deducted from the bounty.

The argus is considered a beast for purposes of the Handle Animal skill.

Hooks

A merchant has come to town selling argus dogs to the noble houses of the area. These are specially trained to respond to the merchant and his rogue friends. The rogues are using the dogs to disable the guards and families so they are easier to rob. However, a former Khador free leaguer has become aware of the plans of the merchant. He has recruited the party to help him stop the thieves.
Assassin Fly

Fine Vermin

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ability</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice</td>
<td>1/4d8+1 (2 hp)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative</td>
<td>+2 (+2 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed</td>
<td>5 ft., fly 40 ft. (good)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC</td>
<td>22 (+2 Dex, +8 size, +2 natural)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks</td>
<td>Sting +10 melee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage</td>
<td>Poison/implant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach</td>
<td>½ ft. by ½ ft./0 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks</td>
<td>Poison/implant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities</td>
<td>Vermin, assassin fly weaknesses</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves</td>
<td>Fort +3, Ref +2, Will +0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Abilities:

- Str 1, Dex 15, Con 12,
- Int —, Wis 10, Cha 2

Skills:

- Hide +18, Listen +4, Spot +4

Feats:

- Ability Focus (poison/implant),
- Weapon Finesse (sting)

Climate/Terrain:

- Any desert

Organization:

- Solitary, pair, or nest (11—20)

Challenge Rating:

- 2

Alignment:

- Always neutral

Advancement:

- —

---

I first came across this specimen upon my maiden voyage into the fringes of the Bloodstone Marches. While traveling through the canyons, my group came across an unconscious sand beast. The creature’s lungs labored in the scorching sun. I asked my trusted guide Quirnul what could have felled the creature. He replied with a single word, “khal’pain.”

This cryptic answer left me wondering what he meant, but I did not have to wonder for long before we heard one of our traveling companions cry out. It was Michael Chanwille, a quick but determined student of mine. Curious to a fault, he had approached the fallen sand beast before being told to stop by doing so had lost his life.

We advanced towards Michael’s body, waiting for the assassin fly’s strike. It came out of the shadows with frightening speed. I had barely moved my sword, when with a flicker of his war fan, Quirnul struck the insect down just inches from my neck. We cremated Michael’s corpse to keep the larvae inside him from hatching and returned to Corvus with bashed necks.

Assassin flies have a crimson carapace and fine black wings that blend into the rocky terrain of the Bloodstone Marches. They also have a wicked stinger used to both implant and poison their victims. The male’s poison is a mixture of potent blood and nerve toxins, meant to prepare the body to host the female’s eggs.

Combat

Assassin flies hide within the crevices of canyon walls or rocky outcroppings and wait for unwary creatures to come within range. The males attack anything within an 80-foot radius of the nest, while the females only venture out of their nests in order to implant eggs.

Poison (Ex): The male assassin fly’s sting injects poison into the victim’s body, forcing them to make a Fortitude save (DC 13);

- initial damage 3d4
temporary Constitution, secondary damage 3d4 temporary Intelligence.

Implant (Ex): A female assassin fly that hits with a sting attack injects eggs into the opponent’s body. The affected creature must succeed at Fortitude save (DC 13) to avoid implantation. Often the female assassin fly uses this ability on unconscious, helpless, or dead creatures (which get no saving throw); this attack injects 1d10+8 eggs and leaves an inflamed crimson ring around the area where the eggs have been injected. A remove disease spell rids the victim of the eggs, as does a successful Heal check (DC 20). If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt causes 1d4 points of damage to the patient. The eggs hatch after a day, at which time the victim falls increasingly ill (-1 permanent damage to all ability scores for every 8 hours the infestation continues). Drinking a draught made from blood polyp leaves kills off the larvae within the body ninety percent of the time, but also forces the victim to make a Fortitude save (DC 13) or suffer 1d4+1 points of initial and secondary temporary Constitution damage. The eggs take 1d4+3 days to reach maturity, at which time they emerge from the creature and start to hunt.

Assassin Fly Weaknesses: After an hour in a humid environment, the assassin fly’s speed slows to 20 ft., and their maneuverability drops to average. If an assassin fly’s wings actually get wet, then it loses the ability to fly. Incense made from blood polyp root also repels assassin flies with its acrid smell.

Treasure

The assassin fly’s poison is highly prized on the Iron Kingdoms’ black markets. Each dose of poison is worth 750 gp. Assassin fly eggs are also poisonous if ingested and force the consumer to make a Fortitude save (DC 11) or suffer 2d4+1 temporary Constitution initial damage and 2d4+1 temporary Intelligence secondary damage for each egg ingested. Assassin fly eggs sell for about 180 gp.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.

UNCOMMON: Assassin flies only fertilize one clutch of eggs at a time and protect the body of those who have been implanted with eggs until the larvae emerge from the victim’s corpse.

RARE: Assassin flies have delicate wings that react poorly in humid conditions and can be rendered entirely useless if wet. Incense made of blood polyp root repels assassin flies.

OBSCURE: Ingesting a draught made from blood polyp leaves (only found in the Bloodstone Marches) has a 90% chance of killing off assassin fly larvae.

Hooks

An assassin known only as Khal-paut (named after his mocks operandii) uses assassin flies and their poison to send his victims to early graves. He leaves a dead assassin fly upon his victims as a calling card. The PCs are approached by the local lawmen (or some criminal element) who will pay them handsomely to locate and capture the assassin.

"When I die, I hope it is at the stinger of a khal-paut. The irony of it will make oblivion that much more bearable." — Khal-paut, assassin
Black Ogrun

Large Giant

Hit Dice: 5d8+15 (36 hp)

Initiative: 41 (+1 Dec)

Speed: 20 ft.

AC: 16 (+1 Dec, +5 chainmail)

Attacks: By weapon +7 melee

Damage: Longsword 1d8+3; or greataxe 1d12+5

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.

Special Attacks: Fierce gaze

Special Qualities: Blood-forged steel

 Saves: Fort +7 Ref +2, Will +1

Abilities: Str 20, Dex 13, Con 16

Skills: Craft (weaponsmith) +9, Spot +3, Search +3, Diplomacy +6

Feats: Power Attack, Skill Focus: Craft (weaponsmith)

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Smithy (1), forge (2–4), foundry (5–10)

Challenge Rating: 5

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: 6–15 HD (Large)

---

Cruelly, if one word sums up the black ogrun, it's cruely. Although these creatures are master smiths, they are also slavers, cold-hearted monsters that enslave whoever they can use and slay those they cannot. I myself spent two months in the dark heart of a black ogrun mine, courtesy of traitors that sold me out for some of their famous steel. I managed to pay my supposed comrades back months later, but I will never forget the hell I went through at the hands of the black ogrun.

These dark-hearted creatures resemble their ogrun cousins in many ways. Most obviously, they are the same size and general build. However, the skin of the black ogrun is a dusky soot color, and they have red eyes that glare menacingly from beneath furrowed brows. Their voices are coarse and quick to anger. Their hands are calloused, and corded muscles show the strength gained from years of forging with an anvil. Worst of all, a black ogrun's stare can stop a man in his tracks, so beware their gaze.

It's well known that black ogrun produce weapons and steel of incredible quality. Even though they use slaves and evil practices such as torture, people still trade with them for the beautiful weapons they create. What isn't widely known is that the blades are tempered and forged with blood and dark magic.

Dispose of any weapons you may find in their lairs—the steel is cursed, I'm sure of it.

---

Combat

Black ogrun charge into combat bearing weapons of black steel, usually longswords or greataxes. Their angry gaze can make a grown man freeze in terror. They use this to their advantage and cut down the strongest foes first. If pressed back by fierce opposition, they will run, but they hold grudges for a long time.

Fierce Gaze (Su): Anyone meeting the stare of a black ogrun is treated as being under a hold person spell. The ogrun must make a ranged touch attack at +1 to lock its gaze with its opponent. The gaze can initially be broken with a successful Will save (DC 12). This avoids the effects of the gaze altogether. A held victim remains trapped until the black ogrun looks away or the gaze is otherwise broken.

Blood-forged Steel (Su): Any weapon wielded by a black ogrun has a 10% chance of being cursed, forged with secret rituals and the blood of tortured slaves. Weapons that are...
blood-forged are treated as masterwork quality, as are all black ogrun weapons. The weapons infect anyone who wields them with blood steel madness (see below). Black ogrun are immune to this effect.

Blood Steel Madness
Infected: Contact
DC: 20
Incubation: 1d4 days
Damage: Once the wielder of a blood-forged weapon is angered or irritated they must make a Will save (DC 20). If they fail, they burst into a rage of hatred and bloodlust. They will attack anyone within sight, friend or foe. Treat this as a barbarian's rage that lasts 2d4+4 combat rounds.

The only way to exit the rage is to let it run its course. Once the rage is over, the infected passes out and awakens 1d4 hours later; there is a 50% chance they will have no memory of the rage. The disease can only be cured through magical means or by destroying the weapon that caused it. Simply removing the weapon from the wielder's possession will not cure the madness.

Treasure

Black ogrun always produce masterwork weaponry. When selling weapons they always make at least one blood-forged weapon available—usually the finest looking one. They typically have standard treasure, but all rolled weapons will be of masterwork quality.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Black ogrun are vile distant cousins of the regular ogrun found in Ruhl, Cryx, and other kingdoms.

UNCOMMON: Although the black ogrun are brutal slaves, they produce weapons of incredible quality. Weapons produced by black ogrun smiths are valued throughout the Iron Kingdoms.

RARE: The steel of a black ogrun can fix even the bravest of men in place. Never meet their gaze.

OBSOURE: The finest weaponry of the black ogrun forges is cursed. Normally disciplined warriors with these weapons have been known to go mad, killing everyone in their path. There are rumors of berserkers bearing these weapons in the wilds and northern parts of Cryx.

Hooks

- A connection has been drawn between a human arms dealer and a number of bloody attacks—evidence shows his blades were used in the crimes, and the deranged assailants confirm such when they are caught. As it happens, the man is dealing blood forged weapons... but they are not of black ogrun make. Who is the smith and how did they learn the black ogrun's secrets? Where is he getting his blood from? Is there a black ogrun conspiracy afoot, and what is its ultimate goal?

- A more reputable merchant in another city has accidentally allowed some captured blood forged weapons out of his shop. He needs to recruit some curious types to track down the weapons and retrieve them covertly so as to preserve his reputation... and one of the blades is known to belong to the town's mayor.

Their blades are cursed... but the dark man is indeed remarkable.
Boatman

Medium-size Monstrous Humanoid (Aquatic)

- Hit Dice: 10d8+20 (63 hp)
- Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
- Speed: 30 ft., swim 30 ft.
- AC: 14 (+1 Dex, +3 natural)
- Attacks: Rake +15 melee
- Damage: Rake 1d6+5 and ability score loss
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
- Special Attacks: Ability score loss
- Special Qualities: Boat of shades, create spawn, spell-like abilities, boatman weaknesses
-  Saves: Fort +9, Ref +8, Will +4

Abilities:

- Str 21, Dex 13, Con 15, Int 13, Wis 13, Cha 10

Skills:

- Appraise +9, Bluff +10, Hide +9, Listen +12, Spot +12

Feats:

- Alertness, Blind-Fight, Expertise

Climate/Terrain: Any aquatic and marsh

Organization: Solitary (plus 2–8 progeny)

Challenge Rating: 7

Alignment: Always lawful evil

Advancement: 8–10 HD (Medium-size)

---

Wherever there is water to be found you have the chance of crossing paths with an urshan, or in layman’s terms a “boatman.” Born from the pairing of a man and a sea witch (at least according to rumors), these creatures prowls lakes and marsh alike (Fenn Marsh being a notable example) offering to ferry men to the other side.

Boatmen normally appear elderly and almost always reveal themselves when you need a ferry most. Though they have been known to take up residence in well-traveled areas hiding themselves amongst legitimate ferry-men, they usually seek out solitary lives in the Iron Kingdoms’ more remote regions.

The very touch of a boatman can kill a man, and it is said that those slain by its touch rise from the dead. These progeny appear as bloated and corrupted corpses and are mainly used as a distraction. They lie beneath the water’s surface waiting for their master to call them forth, at which time they attack and try to drag those within their master’s boat to a watery death.

My first (and only) ferry ride with a boatman came during a visit to my residence in Corvis. It was evening, and I was seeking a ferry back to my home in southern Corvis. I had just finished a wonderful conversation and dinner with the good Father Pandor Dumas upon church history, and was too pleasantly full to consider the long walk home. When I arrived at the pier an old ferryman was just pulling into dock. I hailed him, and he waved me aboard with a most welcoming grin.

"Where to, gov'nor?" said the ferryman with a cracking voice and appraising look.

After giving him directions to the pier nearest my home, we made great time across the Black River. It was a most peaceful moonlit evening, and I soon found myself settled in and quite drowsy. A fog rolled in.

Through my half-hazed musings I unexpectedly felt something quite queer crawling up the back of my legs. My years of experience proceeded to pull me out of slumber and into the present predicament that I was in. The old man bent over from his position on the stern and told me in a most haunting voice that we were taking on water and if I wanted to make it to the closest dock that I should start bailing. As I pitched the water over the sides I saw something move beneath. I paused.

There just below the surface drifted a drowned man, his flesh pale and bloated and his eyes murky. In ghastly silence, he raised himself up the lip of the boat. I ducked back into the smoking ship and came face to face with no elderly ferryman, but the twisted form of a boatman. His breath was salty and brought tears to my eyes. He reached out.

Remembering my boatman folklore (passed by the campfire of good old Draven Conerghast, a joker I knew in my youth), I said, "I have a bargain for you."

"A bargain is it then?" replied the boatman, his fingers just a breath away from my lips. The water stopped rising. The hands that had been reaching for me retreated back into the waters.

"What bargain will you give me for safe passage? Think quickly, for a moment is all you have."

My first few guesses were met with grotesque grins. "It seems my family will grow by one tonight."

Not being the slight bit interested in joining his "family," I put forth my final guess and hit upon his fancy (a pair of fine leather boots from Khador, a recent gift from a dear friend). After the exchange, he agreed to return me to my residence. Needless to say I bought a new pair of boots, and though I still travel by ferry (after all Corvis is my place of residence) I do so only with those whom I know and trust.

Perhaps the best advice I can give you when dealing with a boatman is to bargain with him. He has a weakness for deal-making and it might just save your life. Then again if you can't figure out what he wants, you better take your chance with the progeny and jump ship.

Combat

The boatman depends upon his expertise and withering touch to keep himself alive long enough for his boat to sink. Boatmen frequently call forth fog to obscure the vision of their company and use it to their advantage in attack. Once the boat has sunk they join their progeny in the waters and attack their opponents relentlessly.

Ability Score Loss (Su): A successful rake attack forces the victim to make a Fortitude save (DC 17) or suffer 1d4+1 points of temporary Constitution damage.

Create Progeny (Su): If a boatman's slam attack drains a humanoid or monstrous humanoid of their Constitution (brought to 0 or less), then the victim rises as a progeny within 1d6 days. A boatman may create and control a number of progeny equal to his Charisma score. The newly raised progeny is under the command of the boatman that created it and remains enslaved until its master dies or dismisses it, at which time it perishes in a pool of murky water. See below for more on progeny.

Boat of Shades (Su): Once a day, a boatman may call forth a quasi-real boat. This boat functions as a normal boat does and is under the complete control of the boatman. The boatman may spend a free action to weaken the boat, at which time it springs a leak and begins sinking. This process takes 2d4 rounds, but may be halted at any time. The boat of shades lasts for up to eight hours, until it is dismissed, or until the boatman is killed.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—change self, detect thoughts.

3/day—dimension door, detention, fog cloud. These abilities are at the spells cast by a 6th-level sorcerer (save DC 10 + spell level).
Boatman

Boatman's Bargain: Boatmen have a weakness for making deals. If asked to bargain, haggle, or any other such activity, the boatman suspends all hostilities (even the sinking of the boat) until a deal is made or a minute has passed. A boatman is bound by the deal for one day; afterwards, he is free to act as he pleases. When a boatman first picks up a traveler, he chooses a single valuable item that he will haggle for (this should be something that can be seen by the boatman and may be of either sentimental or monetary value) and will settle for nothing less.

Progeny Template

Progeny are the risen victims of a boatman's drain attack. They appear as drowned corpses.

Hit Dice: Increase to d12.

Speed: Same as base creature plus swim 30 ft.
AC: Natural armor improves by +2.
Attacks: A progeny gains a rake attack.
Damage: Rake 1d6
Special Qualities: Undead, progeny weakness
 Saves: Same as base creature
Abilities: Strength increases by +2. As undead progeny have no Constitution or Intelligence scores.
Feats: A progeny gains Alertness, Improved Initiative, Toughness, assuming that the base creature does not already have these feats.
Challenge Rating: Same as base creature
Climate/Terrain: Any aquatic and marsh
Organization: Gang (2–8)
Challenge Rating: Same as base creature +1
Alignment: Always lawful evil
Advancement: —

Combat

These creatures lurk just below the surface of the water, waiting for their master to call them forth. They grapple with their opponents in an attempt to pin and drown them.

Progeny Weakness (Su): Progeny cannot survive outside of water for more than 1 minute. If made to do so, they dissolve into a murky pool.
Boatman

Treasure

Boatmen keep well-hidden (and often aquatic) lairs that might contain any manner of treasure gained from past victims.

Divining Coin: A boatman can create a divining coin once per day. This coin grants its possessor the ability to cast a single divination spell as a 7th-level cleric. The coin is good for only a single use and rusts away afterward. Boatmen usually carry 0–2 (1d3–1) coins and use them to locate their victims. Divining coins sell for about 400 gp each on the open market.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Evil spirits haunt the waterways, offering rides to the unwary. Beware unfamiliar ferries.

UNCOMMON: Boatmen are accompanied by undead minions—those who have drowned. Some boatmen are even so bold as to haunt the waterways of cities.

RARE: A boatman's progeny will be destroyed if it is dragged from the water. If a boatman takes a shine to one's possessions, he may accept a bargain—the item for one's life.

OBSCURE: Boatmen can blend into rural societies, posing as reclusive river-folk. They may inhabit distant homesteads or even open shops, all for the purpose of locating new victims and new items to acquire.

Hooks

- The PCs are approached by a well-to-do merchant (or other personage) who has lost a family heirloom to a boatman. The PCs may be hired to simply reacquire the heirloom or to hunt the boatman down.
- Through their adventuring, the PCs have acquired an unusual item and are now being followed by a boatman who wants to possess it. The entity has even set up a small shop in the local area. People have started disappearing and the local authorities may hire the PCs to find out what is causing the disappearances.

The canals of Gyril have seen more than one boatman, but lately I have heard of one prodding the waterways of Gyril as well. Perhaps there is something about the arcane industries that attracts them—something to investigate.

NP
Bog Trog

Medium-sized Humanoid (Aquatic)

Hit Dice: 2d8 (9 hp)
Initiative: +6 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft., swim 30 ft.
AC: 19 (+2 Dex, +5 natural, +2 piecemeal armor)
Attacks: 2 claws +3 melee, bite +1 melee; or by weapon +3 melee or +4 ranged Damage: Claw 1d4+1, bite 1d4; or battleaxe 1d8+1; or shortspear 1d8+1
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Qualities: Camouflage, low-light vision, scent
Saves: Fort +0, Ref +5, Will –1
Abilities: Str 12, Dex 14, Con 11, Int 9, Wis 8, Cha 10
Skills: Hide +5*, Move Silently +5
Feats: Improved Initiative, Multiattack
Climate/Terrain: Warm or temperate marsh
Organization: Pack (2–5), pod (5–20), band (20–40), tribe (50–100)
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Usually neutral evil
Advancement: By character class

I think I am one of the few travelers of the Iron Kingdoms who has ventured a peaceful encounter with the dangerous swamp-dwellers known as bog trogs. Of course, we don't often hear about the violent encounters had with such creatures, because few who encounter them live to tell of it — so I'd have to consider myself doubly lucky.

My guide was a blacksmith who made part of his business peddling camouflage gear made by bog trog craftsman (while there, I picked up a bog trog parka, which was right on par with the swamp goblin parkas I've seen elsewhere). I wasn't permitted into the heart of the village proper, but I learned much on my visit. Bog trogs are masters of camouflage, possessing both a physical capacity for altering their skin pigmentation to match their environment, though in a different physiological fashion I believe, than a swamp goblin, and an innate talent for camouflage-gear, and just about anything else. For this reason, one who encounters bog trogs doesn't usually know my are nearby until he is directly among them... and they start closing in.

Bog trogs are vicious and intolerant creatures, though not as bloodthirsty as some others out there, such as the horrid dregg. They are isolationistic and very territorial. I understand that those in the Fern Marsh near the Mistwater River and Fenmarke Lake area have a bitter lengthy blood-feud with nearby gatormen, who can be just as stubborn and bloodthirsty when it suits them. The gatormen might have overaken them long ago if it weren't for the sheer numbers and tenacity of the bog trogs. I must admit that I was staggered by the concentrated volume of the bog trog population in such a small area. Bog trogs are also known to have similar conflicts in that region (and in others) with swamp gobbins, who consider them dire enemies (and the two being so similar in some ways, I don't blame them).

Though humanoid, bog trogs are very reptilian, even fish-like, in appearance, with skin that is a dark green and brown in its natural state. Their culture is advanced enough to have mastered tool use and adopted a basic infrastructure, though they are still primitive compared to humans or even the nearby gatormen, the swamp gobbins being much more advanced than both.
Combat

Bog tugs are able and surprisingly clever combatants. They always attack in numbers and make heavy use of stealth and surprise. Once engaged, they are relentless and merciless.

Camouflage (Ex): Bog tugs can change the pigmentation of their skin as will to match their surroundings. Doing so is a full-round action and grants a +6 bonus to Hide checks. Armor that does not match the environment cuts this bonus to +2, though bog tugs almost never wear such armor (what piece they do wear is camouflaged to match already).

Feats: Bog tugs receive Improved Initiative as a bonus feat.

Skills: Bog tugs receive a +8 racial bonus to Hide checks when submerged. They also receive a +4 racial bonus to all Craft checks when it comes to camouflaging anything; additionally, they may use their Dexterity bonus as a modifier to their skill roll in lieu of their Intelligence bonus due to their innate knack for it.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Invisible creatures stalk the waters and trails of deep swamps, capturing any who venture too far and leaving no survivors.

UNCOMMON: These creatures are strange humanoids called bog tugs, and they can change their skin to blend in with their surroundings.

RARE: Bog tugs are most active during the morning and evening hours, and they are far more likely to pursue trespassers during the peak hours of day. If they are encountered, an overt display of raw strength will win the respect of a bog tug party, and if played up correctly could lead to a peaceful party.

OBSCURE: Bog tug legends speak of a truly mammoth bog tug lizard beast called Ashiga. He was defeated centuries ago by the giant Ulmer (who himself disappeared centuries ago) and buried himself deep, deep beneath Sike Duna (the Great Swamp of bog tug legend) where he sleeps even today. Rumor has it that the bog tugs have never ceased their search for Ashiga, who they dearly hope to awaken.

Treasure

Bog tugs, though notoriously vicious and difficult to deal with, are well respected for their acumen when it comes to camouflage. Bog tug parkas, though hard to find, grant a +4 circumstance bonus to Hide checks when worn in an appropriate environment; they can be worn over armor, but impose an additional -1 armor check penalty. Such parkas tend to sell for 50 to 200 gp, depending on availability. If one has the connections, they might even be able to hire bog tug craftsmen out for custom camouflaging assignments (such as, say, camouflaging a bunker). Items created in such typically add +5 or more to the Spot DC. Payment for such chores varies widely and typically involves some sort of bartering or favors.

Hooks

A woodsman originally out of Pointe-Bureau has gone missing in the Greater Cygnarian area, and it is suspected that a tribe of ravenous bog tugs has captured him. The man's family is paying a hefty ransom to anyone who can return him alive or dead (preferably alive). The truth of the matter is that the man has gone off his rocker, believing himself to be a foppish lizard god born from Ogden (related to Ashiga perhaps). What's more is that the tribe of bog tugs believe him and have adopted him as their living deity. Needless to say, they won't be too willing to part with him until he is come along.
As a man of science I truly enjoy debunking rumors, and just recently my studies have lulled the persistent rumor that bridge trolls are related to the other members of the troll family. True, a bridge troll resembles a troll, and the anatomical properties are similar. However, the creature is far more primitive, and it is either an amphibious throwback or another species entirely—which I'm not yet sure. But, this creature is not a true troll in the scientific sense, as are trollkin, dire trolls, and the like. Not that taxonomy matters much when one is leaping at you, trying to bite your head off.

Bridge trolls are stupid, savage creatures that are most common in northern Cygnar, Llael, and Rhul. In times past they positively infested the city of Merywyn, and they are still occasionally found there and even in the urban waterways of Corvis. Some of the vile amphibious creatures have been sighted as far south as the outskirts of Cassita, but they never stray far from the Black River, wherever they range. If they have any kind of spawning ground, it has yet to be found.

The beasts are always found in or near urban environments, where they take up residence under bridges and piers, waiting for unsuspecting prey to walk by. Luckily, the creatures are as dim as they are strong. The behavior of a bridge troll is very predictable—if the beast is hungry it bounds upwards to attack when good-smelling prey walks overhead. This makes them manageable for organized parties, but they are deadly to the unprepared.

Bridge trolls have dentulous jaws, filled with rows of sharp teeth that can snap forward to make a deadly biting attack. The skin is gray and pebbly in texture. Its claws and feet are webbed, and pores in the rough skin allow it to breathe underwater, like a frog. Their hide also has some interesting mimetic qualities—they actually have the ability to draw strength from stone or wood. By tapping a bridge with their knuckles, they can make their skin take on the properties of the structure, hardening them against physical blows.

While bridge trolls no longer plague Merywyn as they once did, they can still be a danger during the wet months, and a few are still within every spring when the waters of Llael rise. Even today that kingdom has a standing bounty of 100 crowns on their grotesque heads—but I assure you, there are much easier ways to earn your keep!
Bridge Troll

Combat

Bridge trolls can eat fish and eel, but when one gets the taste for land-meat it begins to prey exclusively on people and domestic animals. The beasts tend to attack lone travelers or small groups of people, but older specimens may have learned to avoid the smells of burning pitch and blasting powder that accompany armed parties. They prefer to attack by surprise, leaping from a submerged hiding spot if possible.

Amphibious (Ex): Bridge trolls can breathe equally well in water or air.

Bridge-tapping (Su): Once per day a bridge troll can tap stone or wood to gain the protective properties of the material. If a bridge troll taps stone it gains the effects of a mending spell as if cast by a 7th-level druid. If a bridge troll taps wood, it imbues the creature with damage reduction 10/+8 and absorbs 20 total points of damage before the benefit fades. Bridge trolls cannot mimic wood and stone at the same time. Note that when this occurs the bridge troll's skin tone changes according to the material mimicked, though not enough to grant any true camouflage.

Crashing Bite (Ex): A bridge troll can make a great bite attack that detends its jaws further to take a larger bite out of its prey, doing +8 additional points of damage if the attack is successful. It may do this freely as a full-round action.

Regeneration (Ex): Acid and fire inflict normal damage to bridge trolls.

Skills: Bridge trolls use their Strength score to determine their Intimidate skill modifier. They also receive a +8 racial bonus to Hide checks when submerged.

Legends and Lore

COMMON: The vile bridge trolls lurk under bridges in wet areas. They'll snatch you up right quick if you aren't careful.
UNCOMMON: Watch out for the creatures' snapping bite. They can open their mouths wider than a dwarven shield and bite your arm right off.
RARE: The creatures make a distinct tapping noise before they attack, as they somehow absorb the toughness of nearby wood or stone.
OBSCURE: Under the peaks of southern Rhul, there is a massive mother bridge troll. She dwells in an underground lake fed by the Black River. The blasted troll spawns a few more of these foul creatures each year.

Treasure

The intact hide of a bridge troll is usually far more valuable than anything that might be dredged up from the beast's often-watery lair. A properly skilled craftsman can craft the hide into a jacket or cloak that wears like simple clothing but is quite resistant to attack.

The jacket or cloak provides damage reduction 4/+1. It takes a good portion of intact bridge troll hide, the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat, Craft [leatherworking], 50 XP, and 200 gp to prepare. This clothing is bulky and cannot be worn over armor. A bridge troll garment bestows no special value to armor class. Spell-casters value these highly and most will gladly pay up to 4000 gp for one.

Hooks

A local bridge has been the site of some bloody mishaps due to a bridge troll that has taken to attacking the mules and packhorses of passing beggars. In the latest attack it even killed and ate a caravan guard. The elder of the local village is afraid that the beast will soon come looking for food in the village itself, and wants to recruit the PC's to hunt down and slay the despicable beast.
Burrow-Mawg

Tiny Beast
Hit Dice: 1d10+2 (7 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+4 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft., burrow 10 ft.
AC: 16 (+2 size, +4 Dex)
Attacks: Bite +6 melee, 2 claws +2 melee
Damage: Bite 1d6-1, claw 1d4+1
Face/Reach: 2 ft. by 2 ½ ft. / 0 ft.
Special Attacks: Rage
Special Qualities: Scent
Saves: Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +1
Abilities: Str 8, Dex 18, Con 15
Skills: Int 4, Wis 12, Cha 6
Feats: Listen +9, Spot +9
Climate/Terrain: Temperate forest, hill, plains, and underground Organization: Pack (10–20) or mob (20–40)
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 2–3 HD (Tiny)

Burrow-mawgs are despicable little creatures with a severe hungering for flesh. Some people call them land piranhas, for they swarm and consume meat just like those ravenous fish. I have personally witnessed them strip a fair-sized ox of its meat in the span of a few breaths, and I shudder whenever I think of what these beasts can do to a man. There are stories of these creatures catching travelers at night, leaving nothing but tattered cloth and bones as the unfortunate person’s sole remains come first light.

In appearance, these beasts resemble a blend between a badger and a large bat. They are covered in a layer of dark red-brown fur with four long, black claws at the end of each powerful limb. The claws are easily as long as a man’s finger, and are meant for two purposes: burrowing through earth and rending through flesh. They have two large blood-red eyes that enable extraordinary night vision, venom-dripping, offsetting snouts that hunt in on living flesh from half a league away, and pointed, bat-like ears that detect slight noises across great distances.

Their most frightening feature, however, is their strong, prodigious maws filled with dozens of sharp, serrated fangs—perhaps this is the source of the name “mawg.” I’m not sure. These curved teeth are perfectly suited to sawing through not just meat but also cartilage and bone. It is said that one mawg can grind through a grown man’s forearm in less than two seconds.

Hints of burrow-mawgs in the vicinity are in the wildness of their movements and their scenting habits. When on the hunt, these boisterous monstrosities chitter and snuffle, and, once the prey is scented, they squeal at full volume while skittering toward their target. They rely almost solely on their remarkable sense of smell and hearing whenever abroad during the daylight hours. For these creatures are nearly blind except at night, during which a mawg’s vision is significantly acute. In fact, these beasts nearly always surface at night, preferring to hide away in their burrows and sleep during daylight. One way to keep these creatures at bay is with light, but if they have not eaten in some time, light or no, the creatures will eventually overcome their misgivings in order to sate their ravenous appetite. Some use this voracious appetite against them, for they will fearlessly venture into danger for food. In fact, it is rumored that during times of scarcity they tend to eat one another. So this, coupled with the fact that burrow-mawgs will leap into a flame pit to chase after meat, is most likely what keeps the population of these horrid beasts under some measure of control.
Combat

Burrow-mawgs attack immediately at the first scent of food if it appears that they have sufficient numbers to bring down their prey.

Rage (Ex): As soon as a burrow-mawg pack sniffs prey, it flares into a berserk rage. Individual mawgs gain +4 Str, +4 Con, and +2 AC. If half of the pack is killed during combat, then each creature may make a Will save (DC 15) to end its rage and flee. Any creature that remains enraged fights until either it or its opponents are dead.

Light Blindness (Ex): Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a light spell) blinds burrow mawgs for 1 round. They also suffer a -1 circumstance penalty to all attack rolls, saves, and skill checks while operating in bright light.

Skills: Burrow-mawgs receive a +4 racial bonus to Spot and Listen checks. The Spot bonus only applies under low-light or darker conditions.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: Burrow-mawgs cannot tolerate direct light. They are rarely seen during the day, and they hibernate in the deepest parts of their den during the summer months.
RARE: Eating the burrow-mawg adrenal gland boosts the consumer's physical prowess. This attribute-enhancing organ, however, is rather addictive.
OBSCURE: The creatures communicate through minute clicking sounds located in their chittering, although their "language" is seemingly not very complex.

Hooks

Burrow-mawg adrenal glands have become the drug du jour among the local nobility. The glands are valued amongst the nobility not for the benefits one gains in combat after consuming them, but for the high that comes with the increased physical attributes. Suffice to say, these nobles are paying handsomely for fresh burrow-mawg carcasses.

"Those nasty little mawguls have a hunger so terrible they'd eat two, three, I know if you'll help me end them once and for all. One is, they smell blood, they go mad, they throw themselves forward. Two, they're too savage, they kill all sorts of everything else, they leap over a cliff or even straight into a composite's head and don't look back until they'reINSIDE!" - Lord Watkin's Daughter, Undertow society.
Buzzard Beetle

Tiny Vermin

Hit Dice: 1d8-1 (3 hp)
Initiative: +2 (4 Dex)
Speed: 10 ft., fly 40 ft. (good)
AC: 16 (+2 size, +2 Dex, +2 natural)
Attacks: Bite +1 melee
Damage: Bite 1d4-2
Face/Reach: 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft.
Special Attacks: Attach, soften flesh, flesh burrow
Special Qualities: Vermin, immunities
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +0

Abilities: Str 6, Dex 13, Con 9,
Int —, Wis 10, Cha 10

Skills: Climb +10, Hide +14,
Spot +3

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Swarm (5-9), large swarm (10-20)
Challenge Rating: 2
Alignment: Always neutral

Advancement: 2 HD (Tiny), 3 HD (Small)

Scavengers are part of the natural world, but some are more vicious than others. Your average vulture or jackal will flee the sight of a man, but some carrion eaters are not so easily frightened.

One time I agreed to help in the gruesome task of searching the site of a recent battle near Fellgi for the body of the son of a friend of mine. In one of those typically lashed up border skirmishes, several hundred mercenaries working for Cygnor had been slain, along with at least as many in another company working for Khador. A group of us had traveled to the site at night to recover what we could for family and loved ones.

I was toward the back when screams erupted from the men in front. Had I seen the black shapes huddled among the bodies I could have warned them. Dozens of buzzing forms kept from the bodies and flew upon the men. I recognized them at once as buzzard beetles.

About the size of a large rat, these bugs are exceptionally dangerous in groups. Their large black exoskeletons which allow blades quite easily, and only a blunt mace or hammer seems effective against them. Unlike some scavengers, they are just as happy to eat live flesh as dead.

While the men panicked and swatted ineffectually, the beetles landed upon them and began to burrow into their flesh, softening their skin with an excretion from their mandibles. Several died in the space of minutes before we were able to fall back and get under cover. I had never seen so many beetles in one place before, and we were not properly equipped to deal with them. They must have gathered from miles around, drawn by the stench of so much death.

When we returned the next day, cautious and properly armed, all the bones were picked clean as if the battle had happened a hundred years ago.

Combat

Buzzard beetles hide amidst corpses, eating them at their leisure. They become highly agitated if disturbed and will attack anyone who ventures too close. They fly quite well and will dive to attack, then latch themselves onto skin and begin to burrow into their victim until slain.

Attach (Fix): When a beetle makes a successful bite attack, it attaches itself to its victim and begins to soften flesh where it has landed. Any successful attack on the beetle will knock it loose, unless it has begun to burrow. Those wearing metal armor covering the majority of their skin (such as full plate mail) are immune to this.
Soften Flesh (Ex): Once the beetles attach, they emit a fluid that causes flesh to break down and turn to liquid, which the beetles drink for sustenance. With corpses this is a slow process, but when agitated and attacking, it is greatly accelerated. If the victim fails a Fortitude save (DC 10), they take 1d3 acid damage. This save must be repeated each round the beetle is attached, although it will temporarily exhaust its fluid supply after 4 rounds.

Flesh Burrow (Ex): The round following success with softened flesh, the beetle will burrow into the body, continuing to melt tissues with its acidic secretions. Once this has begun, the beetle cannot be knocked off unless it is killed, and any attacks on the beetle cause half as much damage to the person to whom they are attached. The beetle can be purged loose by succeeding an opposed Strength check; the buzzard beetle has an effective Strength of 18 for this ability. This requires a standard action and causes 1d2 damage to the victim if successful.

Immunities (Ex): Buzzard beetles only take half damage from piercing or slashing weapons.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Buzzard beetles are a variety of scavenger that attack the living as eagerly as the dead.

UNCOMMON: Blunt weapons have the most impact against the buzzard beetle’s tough carapace.

RARE: Attacking beetles will latch onto a person and then burrow into them. However, they loathe the smell of oil. Those who rub some lantern oil onto exposed skin will be less likely to be attacked.

OBSOLETE: Alchemists will pay handsomely for intact bodies of buzzard beetles, as there is a mixture derived from their excretions that can ward off petrifaction and paralysis effects.

Hooks

After a merchant wagon is attacked by some bandits, the PCs are sent to recover the bodies, which they find strangely picked clean. When checking closer they disturb a swarm of hiding buzzard beetles.

"Hey, I think I see some jewelry on that rotten skeleton... Ahhahhah!"

—An unlikely rogue learning a hard lesson
One evening I was enjoying ale at the Falling Star with my friend Mitchell Wilkins of the watch. He was several flagons ahead, but I was surprised when he lurched to his feet and began singing at the top of his lungs, eyes straining from their sockets. He then made the mistake of manhandling one of the tavern girls. Soon he was unconscious on the ground with an ugly knot on his head thanks to Darado, the bullish bartender.

My hunch that something was amiss was confirmed when another man began similar antics. With the cooperation of the proprietor, I investigated the grounds.

In the storage area I noted a cork popped loose from a nearby cask, yet there were only a few drops of wine spilled on the floor. Looking closer, I saw a fat little toe poking out where the cork had been. The bouncer and I gave the cask a good shake and heard something thumping around inside! There was a smirch and a foul stream of curses.

Chawing out of the cask, running it in the process, the little creature bit the bouncer’s arm before scurrying away. As I gave chase it belched a cloud of vapors that made me giddy. When I managed to catch up, it had already found the room’s drain, jumped into the grate, and was sucked down like so much ale!

Cask imps, as I have learned, entertain themselves from the shelter of their casks by spying on the emotions of people drinking nearby and controlling their actions. They usually just choose to embarrass their chosen victim, but some are malicious and compel more dangerous actions. This becomes more likely as the grymkin nears the bottom of the barrel and gets grumpy. These imps only need alcohol for sustenance and can go through five gallons of beer or ale a night. This can incur a considerable loss for the tavern owner if not discovered quickly.

Combat

Cask imps have sharp teeth and claws, and are prone to rages if removed from the casks where they enjoy pickling themselves in prodigious amounts of alcohol. They prefer to flee if discovered and use their inebriating burp and shape-change abilities to get away.

Inebriating Burp (Su): Once per day, the cask imp can belch forth a cloud of magically charged gas. Those within a Cask Imp

Treasure

Cask Imps sometimes steal and trash fine bottles of wine, brandy, and other liquors. These cases are difficult to find, unless the grynkin is followed or captured and forced to bar gain for its freedom. Their taste in alcohol is impeccable, and they will always steal the most expensive bottles available.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Cask Imps are alcoholic supernatural creatures that break into taverns for beer and wine.

UNCOMMON: These things are actually grynkin, a nasty form of fey. As their name suggests, they live inside casks of alcohol.

RARE: Cask Imps can control the minds of drunken people near them and can turn into liquid to help them escape.

OBSCURE: They keep secret stashes of valuables and can be forced to give these up if caught. Some cask Imps can turn water into fine brandy if chained with silver and immersed.

Hooks

• The best way to spring cask Imps on a party is while they are celebrating in a local tavern. This works best if one PC is recruited to participate as the dominated drunk.

• Several particularly malicious cask Imps inhabit a Concord tavern, which has since earned a bad reputation. The PCs are hired by the nervous proprietor to find out what is behind this before the city council shuts him down.
Medium-size Monstrous Humanoid

Hit Dice: 4d8 (18 hp)

Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)

Speed: 30 ft., fly 10 ft. (average)

AC: 14 (+1 Dex, +3 studded leather)

Attacks: 4 prosthetic weapons +7 melee

Damage: Prosthetic blade 1d4

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Cephalonok

Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., telepathy, chirognathy, command drudge

Saves: Fort +1, Ref +7, Will +8

Abilities: Str 10, Dex 16, Con 10

Int 18, Wis 14, Cha 16

Skills: Craft (augmentation) +7, Concentration +7, Diplomacy +5, Gather Information +7, Intimidate +5, Intimidate +9

Knowledge (arcana) +9, Listen +6, Search +7, Sense Motive +5, Healing +6, Spot +3

Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (prosthetic weaponry), Iron Will, Multidexterity, Multitool Proficiency (Prosthetic weaponry)

Climate/Terrain: Temperate underground

Organization: Clan (1–4, plus 1–8 drudges), Conclave (5–12, plus 9–20 drudges), Collective (12–26, plus 20–40 drudges)

Challenge Rating: 6

Alignment: Usually lawful evil

Advancement: 5–8 HD (Medium-size); 9–12 HD (Large)

---

The wizard Grimmelbele put it best when he referred to the cephalonok as "the mind-tappers." The creatures ensnare and twist their captives with a perverse science. Sadly I have seen the handiwork of the cephalonok all too close.

Grimmelbele and I discovered a cephalonok settlement while touring the caverns of the Glass Peaks in Rhind. I don't wish to recount the matters that led to our encounter with these godless monsters—however I will tell you that my party spent every rifle round, pistol shot, and spell at our disposal to escape. I am not ashamed to say that we fled from the cephalonok with all speed.

These subterranean overlords stride with a calm purpose and can also fly at will (albeit not very swiftly). Cephalonoks are uniformly clad in a padded black leather garment that covers them from chin to toe. Imbedded in their flesh are intricate mechanical arms that extend over the shoulders in a spider-like manner. Each limb ends in some sort of cutting tool.

The mind-tappers can sense your thoughts and twist your will. With a thought they can hold you in place, while their drudge servitors overpower you. The best way to parley with these abominations is with a pistol.

Cephalonok drudges are held in check with savage modifications and make fearful reinforcements to their master's will. A "helmet" of brass and crystal seems to be surgically bolted over the head of the slave. The implants seem to grant the drudges with increased strength and perception.

I witnessed a myriad of augmentations on these unfortunate as we fought our way past them. Each was crudely tattooed in place with stitches, rings, and even screws. The poor creatures were so twisted that I could not truly say if they were human or something else.

Perhaps there is some ancient text that alludes to the goals of the cephalonok, but whatever motivates them is certainly beyond my own speculation.
Combat

Any encounter with the cephalyx is likely to turn into a brutal melee. While drudges engage opponents in physical combat, the cephalyx use their formidable mental abilities.

Cephalomelk (Sp): At will—size, detect thoughts, mage hand, mage armor; 2/day—hold person, suggestion. These are as the spells cast by a 6th-level wizard (Save DC 13 + spell level).

Telepathy (Su): Cephalyx can telepathically communicate with any creature within 200 feet that has a language.

Command Drudge (Su): Cephalyx orders to a drudge are more compelling than a dominate person spell. A drudge will follow cephalyx telepathic commands as closely as possible, no matter how suicidal.

Chirurgery (Su): The modifications made to a drudge grant him increased strength, new weaponry, and enhanced senses. The grafts and implants also include a cephalyx “helmet.” The helmet usurps the drudge’s will and places them under the total command of its masters. The following template can be applied to any humanoid of Medium-size or smaller.

Cephalyx Drudge

Special Qualities: A drudge retains the hit points and levels of its former self. However, it loses access to any feats, class abilities, spells, or spell-like abilities that it may have had prior to being enslaved. Racial abilities are not affected.

Hit Dice: Increases by one die type to a maximum of 1d10.

Speed: 30 ft.

AC: +4 to natural armor class

Special Attacks: There is a 10% chance that a slave will have a mechanical limb similar to those grafted to a cephalyx. If so, this grants the slave an extra blade attack (+2 melee) that does 2d4 points of damage.

Special Abilities: Darkvision 60 ft.

Attack: Broadsword blade +2 melee

Damage: 1d8 + Str bonus

---

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Cephalyx are creatures that dwell in deep caverns and underground realms.

UNCOMMON: The cephalyx employ mental abilities that can cripple or bend one’s will.

RARE: Cephalyx have absolute command over their slaves. If they catch you, you will join their number.

OBSOLETE: The acolytes of Cyress have a standing enmity with the cephalyx. How this began, and what the enmity is about is a mystery.

---

Treasure

The vaults of the cephalyx are full of treasures seized from the unfortunate they have taken into bondage. Treat these ill-gotten gains as standard treasure.

---

Hooks

Cephalyx have begun using a sinkhole to gain access to the surface world, raiding villages for slave stock. A survivor of a raid has recounted the tale and has begged the players to help him rescue his family.
Crypt Spider

Medium-size Vermin

Hit Dice: 2d8+2 (11 hp)
Initiative: +3 (+3 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft., climb 20 ft.
AC: 14 (+3 Dex, +1 natural)
Attacks: Bite +4 melee
Damage: 1d8+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Acid
Special Qualities: Vermin
Saves: Fort +4, Ref +3, Will +0
Abilities: Str 14, Dex 17, Con 12

Skills: Int —, Wis 11, Cha 3

Skills:
Climb +12*, Hide +9*
Jump +7, Move Silently +4*, Spot +7*

Climate/Terrain: Temperate and warm underground
Organization: Colony (2–5) or swarm (6–11)
Challenge Rating: 3
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 3–5 HD (Medium-size); 5–7 HD (Large)

These large arachnids are more a nuisance than anything, as they feed not on the living, but rather on the dead. Imagine, one spends months and months poring over ancient tombs in search of the resting place of Warlord Kyarna of Osgoth, only to finally get there and find the tomb violated by blasted spiders! They’re everywhere! They’ve ticked dry the bones of every visible corpse and filled every chamber with thick webs. One can’t venture a step without disturbing a colony of their young or slipping in a pile of their effluvial droppings!

When feasting on these carcasses, they first crack open the bones of the fallen with their large oversized mandibles, then secrete a very powerful digestive acid, which they use to dissolve the marrow found within. They then suck up the dissolved marrow and move on to another bone. In this manner, they can quickly destroy any机械设备. I have found instances in which starved crypt spiders have actually eaten ancient bones that lack the marrow they prefer.

Luckily, the spiders only attack the living in self-defense and are therefore little threat to the common man. Adventurers such as myself, however, are another matter. The crypt spiders do not take kindly to any who disturb their homes or feeding grounds. They will not hesitate to band together to take on a foe that poses a threat to their colony. Although they continue to spin webs, which may help them to their earlier evolutionary days as hunters, they do not use them for hunting purposes. The webs merely seem to provide a shelter for the spiders and their young.

Crypt spiders are about as long as a man is tall and stand at about half of that, but I’ve witnessed them squeezing through openings about half that size in search of prey. In appearance, they are possessed of nearly translucent skin that allows one to see the pulsating organs beneath, and their enormous pair of oversized mandibles used for cracking open bones extend outward from the head.

Combat

Crypt spiders usually avoid combat, though they will attack if they feel threatened (unfortunately for adventurers and delving scholars: this includes disturbing their “food”). If pressed, they will release their acid spray.

Acid Spray (Ex): Once per day, a crypt spider can evacuate its acid bladder in a jet from its mouth. This attack does 2d10 points of damage to one target in a 5-foot radius directly in front of the spider. A successful Reflex save (DC 18) halves the damage. They only do this if cornered or sorely pressed.
Skills: Crypt spiders receive a +4 racial bonus to Hide and Spot checks. They also receive a +2 competence bonus to Climb and Move Silently checks when using their webs.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Crypt spiders feast upon the corpses found in tombs.
UNCOMMON: Crypt spiders devour bone marrow.
RARE: Crypt spiders use a powerful acid to digest bone marrow, and they can spray this acid at aggressors when threatened.
OBSCURE: Some say that crypt spiders gain the memories of those they have eaten. Ancient texts allude to a rare alchemical formula that calls for the brain of a crypt spider, which may allow the imbiber to inherit those memories.

Treasure

The crypt spider's full acid bladder can be harvested and sold to the right buyer for 20 gp. The problem in collecting these, however, is that the spiders tend to encapsulate their acid bladders as a last-ditch defense.

Hooks

Professor Pendrake himself approaches the PCs with a proposition. He recently unearthed a major discovery outside the city in which the PCs are currently located. He has located the tomb of a legendary local hero. The trouble is that the entire tomb is infested with crypt spiders, more than the good professor and his assistants can handle. Time is of the essence on this mission, as there are many other parties interested in finding the treasure supposedly located in the tomb. It perturbed Pendrake to leave the site under the watchful eye of his assistant Lyra, and he is now eager to return to the ruin.

I honestly didn't know
Lyra was scared of spiders.
I don't think he'll ever forgive me.
Deathjack

Large Construct

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hit Dice:</th>
<th>20d10 (110 hp)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Initiative:</td>
<td>-1 (-2 size, +1 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed:</td>
<td>30 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC:</td>
<td>27 (-2 size, +1 Dex, +18 natural)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks:</td>
<td>2 slams +25 melee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage:</td>
<td>Slam 2d10+10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach:</td>
<td>10 ft. by 10 ft./15 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks:</td>
<td>Necrowent, improved grab, swallow whole, snare good, skulls of hate, soul furnace, spawn undead</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities:</td>
<td>Construct, cold and fire resistance</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>20, damage reduction</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10/blessed, SR 2.5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities:</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Climate/Terrain: Any remote locale

Organization: Unique

Challenge Rating: 15

Alignment: Chaotic evil

Advancement: 21-40 HD (Huge); 41-60 HD (Colossal)

---

Of all the mercenaries I’ve worked alongside in my travels, the Ironhands are certainly some of the most interesting. They’re specially trained mercenaries working for the Steam & Iron Workers Union, who typically perform tasks like tracking down rogue steamjacks and handlers, though sometimes they’re more interesting things, like barring punker bands. These people are the toughest mercenaries the Union has to offer, accomplished warriors and mages that have seen more than a fair share of mayhem. They are paid well for what they do, and they are very good at it.

Like a lot of guilds and fellowships, the Ironhands have built a mythology for themselves, something most groups do to explain away things that have happened to their people in the past. When a team of Ironhands fails to return from a dangerous mission, it’s said that the Deathjack was waiting for them.

Veteran teamsters and Ironhands from the Union can describe the Deathjack to you in detail. I’ve listened to a few of such tales. Many told me about close calls with the creature, and some even claimed to have vanquished it, only for it to appear once more in a remote location.

Fifteen feet of kettle-black greasy iron and a gut full of soul-burning mechanics, the Deathjack supposedly resembles a steamjack made from the nightmares of a madman. Its head is a horned helm with glowing eyes that sit between massive pneumatic shoulders. A hybrid of machine and vile necromantic energy, its design must be awesome to behold.

From what I can tell the thing doesn’t need coal to burn—it needs souls. Stories mention it sapping the life out of men and leaving mere husks behind. Using some sort of necromantic furnace it draws the life force out of those it can stuff into its iron belly. This vicious boiler hisses and crackles and the furnace vents give off a dark greasy ash as it burns its victims.

It has been seen as close as Corvis as the Widower’s Wood, and as far away as the mountains of Khador. Mention of it has been recorded in tales that go back as far as two hundred years. I’ve even heard mention of a tome that may reveal the nature of its function. An ancient book called the Leviathan Manuscript has been rumored to hold this secret. This dusty manual supposedly details a melding of...
mechanika

with ancient Orqoth rites. The damnable tome could be a key to unlocking the mysteries of the Deathjack.

Construction

Creating a Deathjack is possible. The creator needs to use the procedures outlined in the Librum Mechanum. Learning these procedures costs 1,300 XP. To begin crafting a Deathjack, the creator must meet all of the requirements for crafting a golem as defined in the MM, as well as following the procedures in the tome, which includes many despicable acts, including human sacrifices.

can and will retreat from fights it cannot win. It will often use its reflevent to throw up a screen of charnel ash to cover its escape.

The Deathjack cannot weather the wrath of the blessed and righteous. A properly armed warrior with blessed or holy weapons can easily penetrate the Deathjack's armor. It will attack those that bear such weapons with all of its attention.

Combat

The Deathjack is typically encountered on the outskirts of civilized lands, raiding small communities, and sometimes even armed caravans or patrols to fuel itself. It shows no mercy, slaying anything it sees. It is not without guile, however.
Deathjack

Necrotent (Su): A black greasy necrotic ash leaks out of the Deathjack's smoke vents and engine seams. Twice per day, this smoke can be vented out to form a 30-foot radius cloud around the construct. This cloud remains stationary for 2d4 rounds.

Any living thing within the ash cloud must make a Fortitude save (DC 20) each round. Creatures of 3 HD or less take 1d10 points of damage with a successful save, while those that fail die immediately. Creatures with more than 3 HD that fail their saving throw take 1d10 points of damage as the ash blackens and eats their flesh. A successful save results in half damage.

The ash cloud is heavy and thick, and attempts to disperse it with magical winds are half as effective. Visibility in the ash cloud is 50%, and the ash cloud should be treated as partial cover.

Improved Grab (Ex): The Deathjack will often grab opponents in combat. Once it has a firm enough grip, they get tossed into its furnace through a black iron hatch.

Swallow Whole (Ex): See swallow whole.

MM., Once the Deathjack has its quarry in its grasp, they are tossed into its furnace.

Inside the furnace, individuals take 1d6 points of fire damage per round. In addition the ingested must make a Fortitude save (DC 20) each round in the belly of the beast, or lose one level. It is possible to force a way out through the Deathjack's furnace hatch with a Strength check (DC 25). Attacks made from the inside of its belly are affected by its damage reduction.

Smite Good (Su): The Deathjack's fiendish nature allows it to assault the forces of good with great power. Once per day, the Deathjack can add 20 points of damage to a single melee slam attack versus a good creature.

Skulls of Hate (Su): Mounted on each shoulder of the Deathjack is a skull-shaped lantern. The lanterns act not only as spell focuses for the construct but also provide 360-degree vision, making it impossible to surprise the construct.

The skulls of hate can cast spells from the Death of Destruction clerical list as a 17th-level cleric (including the number of spells available). They must make a Concentration check at +10 if they are struck while casting.

These grim lanterns also empower the jack with the granted abilities of the Death and Destruction domains: death touch and smite as a 17th-level cleric. If not casting spells the skulls of hate make a soft chanting noise, and the flames inside of them glow a hellish red.

Soul Furnace (Su): The soul furnace metabolizes life-force. This horrid engine can hold one living creature of Medium-size, or two creatures of Small size. Although the Deathjack's infernal engine can keep it going without souls, life energy can repair damage done to the construct.

For every level the Deathjack drains it can heal 1d10 hp. It can store life force like a battery, holding up to 20 levels of energy in the furnace. It can expel these life charges (1-4 charges a round at a free action).

The energy heals the construct 1d10 hp per charge spent. Usually when encountered it has 5-10 charges stored in its fiery gut. These dissipate slowly, at a charge a day, if unused.

Spawn Undead (Su): Any creatures slain by the ash vented from the Deathjack's furnace rise again in 24 hours as full-strength zombies or skeletons with a +4 turn resistance. Imbued with a dark appetite these creatures will slowly wander to areas of civilization to feed off of the living. Washing a corpse in holy water or casting bless on the corpse will prevent it from rising up, as long as the blessing takes place within the first 12 hours after death.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The Deathjack is an abomination device that kills indiscriminately. It saps the life of the living to power its furnaces.

UNCOMMON: Its engines can vent a caustic life-draining ash that can kill a normal man in an instant. This ash has necro-
Deathjack

Deathjack Sightings

Ceryl — 599. Merchant caravan attacked, 20 dead, 1 survivor.

Wyrnwall Mountains — 601. Mining town devastated, 41 dead, 12 missing.

Pharin (10 mi. south) — 601. Trollkin kith massacred, 10 dead, 1 missing.

Fort Tull — 602. Assault on main gates of city, 33 dead, 40 injured, 8 missing.

Highgate (20 mi. east) — 589. Mountain pass waystation destroyed.

Unknown casualties; 20 estimated.

High Gobk (15 mi. NE of Caspia) — 592. Gobk caravan massacred, 12 dead.

Kaldan (20 mi. E of Berek) — 593. Ironhand crew ambushed, 24 dead, 2 survivors.

Mildert — 599. Neighboring troll population wiped out. Unknown casualties, at least 50 estimated.

Inter — 598. 6 confirmed sightings, 0 confirmed dead, 12 missing.

Kbordov — 592. Reported capture. Believed to be falsified; no physical evidence.

Feilg — 596. The Brickfield Massacre, 102 dead, 32 injured, 16 missing.

Cynaran-Khaderan border (NW of Corvus) — 601. The Red Fist mercenaries wiped out, 42 dead, 1 survivor.

Is there a pattern? ✚

Treasure

If the Deathjack is defeated, the skulls of hate can be taken as magic items. The skulls are worth 30,000 gp apiece. The wielder of a single lie skull once per day can use the domain granted from the Death or Destruction list (depending on the skull held) as if they were a 12th-level cleric. Every time a skull is used it shifts a character's alignment one step closer to chaotic evil; a Will save (DC 20) negates. The DM may choose the path taken, but it usually is the quickest route.

Once a shift to chaotic evil is complete, the affected is compelled as if by a geo spell (cast at 12th-level) to seek out a steamjack and attach both of the skulls to the frame of the jack. Once this is done, the skulls will flare to life and cause the steamjack to transform into the Deathjack within 10 rounds. At this point the Deathjack will destroy the gased character and consume their soul. It will then make its way towards more souls for consumption.

The skulls themselves are impermeable to harm and cannot be destroyed by any regular means.

Hooks

The Deathjack has been rumored to be approaching a small village or town. The characters are asked to help evacuate the village and outlying areas before the creature devastates the populace with its wrath. Or, they are told that "won't leave where they grew up for some damn contraption, opportunistic nobles looking for a cause, and even thieves wanting to plunder coffers may be obstacles the characters face as they attempt to get innocents away from the area before the Deathjack arrives.
Disembodied

Medium-size Undead (Incorporeal)
Hit Dice: 6d12 (39 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft., fly 30 ft. (perfect)
AC: 13 (+1 Dex, +2 deflection)
Attacks: Incorporeal touch +4 melee; or 2 claws +4 melee
Damage: Energy drain; or claw 1d8 against ethereal targets
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.
Special Attacks: Energy drain, spell-like abilities
Special Qualities: Undead, darkvision 60 ft., incorporeal, damage reduction 10/x1, +4 turn resistance, rejuvenation

Saves: Fort +2, Ref +3, Will +8
Abilities: Str —, Dex 13, Con —,
Int 13, Wis 16, Cha 15
Skills: Diplomacy +11, Intimidate +11, Knowledge (Arcana)
+7, Listen +9, Sense Motive +12, Spot +9
Feats: Alertness, Flyby Attack, Improved Initiative
Climate/Terrain: Any land
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 7
Alignment: Always lawful evil
Advancement: 7–12 HD (Medium-size)

The disembodied are to be both feared and pitied. They are the shades of priests who lived their lives with the outward appearance of goodness and light. Naturally, were it truly so, they would not suffer the fate of the disembodied, for such priests committed unspeakable acts unbeknownst to their flocks and were never discovered, never punished... but nothing can be concealed from the gods.

Some tainted priests with a strong enough life force, knowing that their spirits would face eternal torment for their crimes, resist crossing over and remain tied to their corporeal form to escape retribution. The disembodied develop a terrible hatred for the living, and to sustain their power they will attempt to consume the life force of any intelligent creature that venturers too close.

Fortunately, these horrid species cannot move more than about 100 feet from their corpse. If they do so, they are destroyed and forced to face their fate. Removing the corpse, usually interred in a crypt, will only cause the spirit to follow. To truly defeat these foul defilers, the corpse must be burned, immersed in acid or holy water, or otherwise utterly destroyed.

That is never an easy task. Mother Caspius Grisius, the legendary abbess of Felig, penned the definitive tome On Restoring the Blackened Heart three centuries past. The great grimoire hunter warns that the disembodied are possessed of “great despised magics,” remnants of the powers they held in life. They are vulnerable to holy water (though only if applied to the corpse) and will resist all but the most powerful of magical spells. I have been told that fire and acid will also send them to their eternal rest, though I have never observed such methods in practice.

The disembodied will also retain the objects they possessed in life. Mother Grisius tells us, hoarding arms, armor, and other relics in the tomb. If that is inspiration for some to seek out the places where these things pass their uneasy rest, be warned: they are deadly evil.
Disembodied

Combat

The disembodied can do no physical damage at all against the living. They instead attempt to drain the life-force of the living with an incorporeal attack. Ethereal attacks against the disembodied function as normal attacks and vice versa.

Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by a disembodied’s claw attack suffer one negative level. Each time a negative level is bestowed, the disembodied’s hit points return to full if it has been damaged. The Fortitude save to remove a negative level is at DC 15.

Spell-like Abilities:
3/day — animate dead, cause fear, darkness, death knell, protection from good; 1/day — slay living. These abilities are as the spells cast by a 10th-level cleric (save DC 12 + spell level).

Rejuvenation (Su): A disembodied cannot be permanently killed unless its physical body is found and destroyed. If its incorporeal form is defeated, it will return to the location of its corpse at full strength within 2412 hours.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The disembodied are the ghosts of priests gone bad.

UNCOMMON: Destroying the corpse of a disembodied with fire, holy water, or acid will kill the spirit.

RARE: The mere touch of these vile creatures can kill.

OBSOURE: Unless its physical corpse is burned or doused with acid or holy water, a disembodied will return to haunt the area where it is buried.

Turn Resistance (Ex): Disembodied have 14 turn resistance. If it is successfully turned, the disembodied returns to its body for 30 minutes before it can move again.

Treasure

The coffin of a disembodied has a 50% chance of containing 1d4 minor magical items usable by the cleric class. In addition, there is a 50% chance of magic armor and a 30% chance of a weapon suitable to the cleric class being in the burial vessel.

Hooks

Communities who discover their local crypt inhabited by one of the disembodied often find themselves in a bind. They’re angry to discover such a fiend had mistaken their local church unabomPasser as their. They are usually incapable of dealing with the deadly spirit in their midst and also embarrassed that such a thing could have happened under their noses. Hiring a party of adventurers to quickly clean out the crypt is likely to be their first choice.
Dolomite

Huge Aberration (Earth)
Hit Dice: 12d8+108 (162 hp)
Initiative: -1 (-1 Dec)
Speed: 20 ft.
AC: 29 (-2 str, -1 Dec, +22 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +1 / melee
Damage: Slam 2d6+10
Face/Reach: 10 ft. by 10 ft./15 ft.
Special Attacks: improved grab, constrict, rend
Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., damage tolerance 25/+1, music sensitivity
Saves: Fort +15, Ref +3, Will +8
Abilities: Str 30, Dex 9, Con 28,
Int 3, Wis 6, Cha 10
Skills: Listen +2, Search +6, Spot +6
Feats: Great Fortitude, Iron Will
Climate/Terrain: Any plains, hills, and mountains
Organization: Solitary or rutting group
Challenge Rating: 9
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 13–24 HD (Huge); 25–36
HD (Gargantuan)

I must confess that I find the dolomite, or slag hound as it is known in Rhal, to be a truly fascinating creature.

These huge, jagged jumbles of rock and dirt are usually mistaken for a pile of rubble, though in reality they are slow moving, dim-witted creatures found in uninhabited rocky plains and low mountain foothills.

The migration of the dolomite during its rutting season once per decade is a wonder to behold (if you happen to have quite a bit of leisure time). Shuffling bipedal hulks, they shuffle across the plains in slow intricate dances, swaying and swinging their massive eyeless heads from side to side. The dolomites dance for a year until each has paired off with a mate.

Usually they are mostly harmless—and harmless to boot. They eat dirt for the most part, tearing up great clods of earth and stuffing them into their gigantic oases.

Unfortunately, these massive and virtually indestructible monsters have also developed an insatiable hunger for magically imbued metal of all kinds. I have seen the armor of stalwart mercenaries torn to shreds by these giants—sometimes with the mercenaries still inside! They will stop at nothing to possess—and eat—an enchanted sword, shield, or pair of bracers.

Once it has devoured all it can find, the dolomite will move on, usually ignoring all else.

They will defend themselves if attacked, but will not pursue a retreating foe. I have never seen a dolomite fall in combat, nor, oddly, have I seen the corpse of one. They leave no spoils, so what becomes of the metals they consume I cannot tell.

They do have one curious weakness—music, which will cause the dolomite to stand as if entranced. Stranger still, they seem to have a taste for good music. They will not usually respond to my bawdy tavern songs (admittedly, I sing like a crow).

They did respond favorably to the harping of Wyldson Faril, the famed performer from Five Finger who accompanied me once on safari to chronicle my adventures. I will never forget the sight of poor Master Faril singing practically across the steppe with several two-headed dolomites in tow. Oh, we told the vain young thespian all he had to do was stop singing. Eventually.

38
Combat

Dolomites attack only if provoked or if they are near magical items.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this the dolomite must hit with a successful slam attack. It can then attempt to constrict or rend.

Constrict (Ex): A dolomite inflicts 2d6+10 points of damage with a successful grapple check against Large or smaller creatures.

Rend (Ex): A dolomite can tear a Medium-sized or smaller creature from limb to limb after a successful grab. It automatically inflicts 2d6+10 points of damage per round until the creature is dead. It will only do this to obtain enchanted armor or other items on the creature's person.

Music Sensitivity (Ex): Music sung or played on an instrument will cause the dolomite to stand as if entranced. A successful performance roll (DC 15) will cause the creature to attempt to stay within 50 feet of the music's source until it stops. Poorly performed music (unsuccessful skill check) does not affect the dolomite, though a truly botched performance may enrage the creature at the DM's option.

Treasure

A dolomite's gizzard may contain magic items it has consumed, though some will eventually (after 100 years) be destroyed by the creature's glacially slow digestion. There's a 50% chance of 1-2 random items.

---

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The dolomite lives exclusively in rocky areas.

UNCOMMON: Dolomite gizzards sometimes contain magic items made of metal.

RARE: They like music, and a well-played song can stop a magic-hunting dolomite in its tracks.

OBSCURE:

The dolomites were called "the hounds of Menoth" in ancient times, and records of their existence predate the Oorgoth invasion. It is written that they were created by Menoth to remind men that magic is a curse as often as a blessing. Dolomites will not attempt to consume a magic item enchanted by the Church of Menoth.

Hooks

The dolomite's insatiable hunger for magic drives it to consume dozens of items during its 2,000-year lifetime. Some are family heirlooms: a count wants the family's fabled mace (lost by his foolish son) returned from the gut of one that lives in the not-too-distant foothills and will pay well for its return. Some are artifacts: a dolomite on the border with the Protecorate of Menoth is reputed to have eaten the powerful Melf's Vividur (+3 chain mail of perfection). Unfortunately, the creatures are revered in the Protecorate and it is forbidden to harm them.
Dracodile, often called dracodiles in the lands of Khador, are usually the top predators in whatever swamp, marsh, or bog they prowl. They are particularly vicious killers that are ever hungry and fearless. They are not wholly predictable, however, and they are ambush predators that can be submerged several feet away without their prey having the slightest inkling that they are ever so close to a sudden, violent death. Of course, if you’re this close, it’s usually too late.

Dracodiles are surprisingly protective of their young. If you should spy any rather small dracodiles, nests, or eggs, I suggest you put forth your best effort to be somewhere else, and quick. Their nests are large areas—usually 40 feet in diameter—that have been cleared of most debris and are dominated centrally by a large mound of mud and various debris, within which the female dracodile lays her eggs. If she feels that her eggs are in danger, she will not leave the nest site, often without eating for several days. Regardless of any immediate threats, she’ll never be more than a stone’s throw away from the nest and will be similarly close to her young once they are hatched.

I should take a moment here to address the “legend” as Lynus calls it, which is circulating about my encounter with a dracodile and my subsequent “riding” of the beast. I must tell you, it was nothing of the sort, and I wouldn’t dare “play” with one of these most vicious of creatures. Lynus and I were traveling through Widower’s Wood towards a popular breeding ground of the Tyner’s toad (named for the explorer that discovered and then was later killed by the extremely poisonous amphibian) when we were suddenly attacked by an exceptionally large dracodile. On one hand, we were fortunate that the thing lunged at our pack-animal, Daisy, instead of us, aside our horses. On the other, my lucky bow and journals (which were fortunately sealed in a water-tight satchel) were lashed to Daisy’s side, and I beg you to let me have two of my most prized possessions to an oversized wild lizard! Prudence be damned, I leaped into the water after the beast, a dagger firmly clenched in my teeth. I suppose I was riding the dracodile at one point, but that was just a matter of circumstance. It was the easiest way... to reach the thing's eyes with my blade! To the detriment of my scholarly sensibilities I must admit it was terribly fun, though I still roll my eyes at Lyrus's calling it a legend, despite how true some of the circumstances may have been.

Combat

A dracodile will usually hide partially submerged while waiting for its prey to come within striking range and then burst out of the water, jaws agape. It will reserve its breath weapon for larger or more dangerous prey (such as fully armored and armed adventurers).

Breath

Weapon (Su): Up to four times a day, a dracodile can breathe forth a noxious cloud of swamp gas and a minute amount of its own digestive acids. It takes the form of a cone 50 feet long, doing 3d6 points of damage and causing confusion, per the spell. A successful Reflex save (DC 20) results in half damage and the target is not confused.

Improved Grab (Ex): If a dracodile hits a Large size or smaller creature with a bite attack, it can attempt to grab the creature and drag it into deeper waters to drown. The dracodile automatically deals bite damage each round it maintains a hold on its prey, and victims held underwater may be subject to drowning.

Skills: The dracodile receives a +10 racial bonus to Hide checks when submerged.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Dracodiles are monstrous reptiles that live in swamps and marshes.

UNCOMMON: Female dracodiles are extremely protective of their eggs and young and will go to any length to kill those that threaten them.

RARE: Dracodiles are able to inhale and store swamp gas. They release the concentrated gas in a noxious breath attack.

OBSCURE: Dracodiles are unusually attracted to the racket created by engines. If you stop your steamboat for any length of time out in the swamps, make sure that you don't let the engine run idle; turn it off.

Treasure

Female dracodiles often bring their prey back to their nest, so their young can eat in relative safety. Here can be found the remains of many adventurers, swamps, and other interlopers. Numerous man-made items are sure to abound in these dangerous nest sites.

Dracodile hides can be made into masterwork hide armor.

Hooks

Merchants or armories may hire the PCs to hunt dracodiles for their hide. This is obviously no easy task, so their employers will undoubtedly pay handsomely for the return of a few quality dracodile hides. If they acquire themselves well, they may employ the PCs in future endeavors. As Professor Pendrake can attest, tell tales travel fast, and dracodile slayers can quickly gain a name for themselves as big game hunters in the Iron Kingdoms.
Dragon Fish

Tiny Animal

Hit Dice: 1d8+1 (5 hp)
Initiative: +1 (Dex)
Speed: Swim 30 ft.
AC: 19 (+2 size, +4 Dex, +3 natural)
Attacks: Bite +6 melee
Damage: Bite 1d4+1
Face/Reach: 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft.
Special Attacks: Frenzy, swarm
Special Qualities: Keen scent
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +6, Will +0

Abilities: Str 6, Dex 18, Con 12
Int 1, Wis 10, Cha 2
Skills: Hide +6*, Listen +9, Spot +9
Feats: Weapon Finesse (bite)

Climate/Terrain: Any aquatic
Organization: School (2–12) or pack (13–36)
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 2–3 HD (Tiny); 4–5 HD (Small)

There’s rarely a single time I can recall almost losing my life to a beast in all my adventures. No, it wasn’t when a gorgon lunged at me with its razor-sharp teeth, nor was it when a crazed Orich merchant sent his steamjacks charging at me with an oversized hammer, destroying half a warehouse and an entire pier in the process (smoking itself to the bottom of the channel as well).

No, it was one of those viscous little dragon fish that did it. A school of them had wandered up the Black River into Coreis one afternoon (a rare occurrence), and I had the misfortune of being knocked overboard off a ferry I was sworn to protect. The little bastards ate one of my finest tunics right off my back, and they sent a load of my personal effects to the bottom of the river. But it was when I was pulled back aboard and found my finger hanging, cocked to the side, that I got really angry. Luckily, I had just made acquaintances with the good Father Dumas at the time, and he saw to it that one of his talented assistants fixed me back up right away. When I’m out on the river though, and the current’s just right, I sometimes get a twitch in my finger, reminding me of the frustrating incident.

Most, however, are not as unlucky as I was. Dragon fish are truly wicked little creatures with extremely sharp teeth and an endless appetite. Their real danger is when a school of them swarms and begins to frenzy. I can’t say I’ve ever seen anything come out of those churning waters alive.

Combat

Dragon fish always attack in numbers. Their teeth are extremely sharp and their appetite endless. They will swarm any submerged prey, and once blood is drawn they will frenzy.

Swarm (Ex): Whenever four or more dragon fish attack a single target, they constitute a swarm and gain certain advantages. They no longer make individual attacks, and instead one attack roll is made for the entire swarm. This attack roll gains +2 to attack and damage for every four fish in the swarm. Furthermore, targets are now engulfed by the swarm and are considered flat-footed when determining AC. At the DM’s option, some attacks may affect the entire swarm, although this usually affects a swarmed target too.

Frenzy (Ex): If the target is a creature that sheds blood, then there is a cumulative 5% chance per point of damage done that the swarm will frenzy. A frenzied swarm is able to make two attacks per round, instead of one, at no penalty.
Each fish in the frenzy, however, suffers -3 to its AC. The frenzy may not be ended willingly, and it continues until all creatures that enter the frenzy’s threatened area are dead (and usually completely consumed). The frenzied swarm will attack absolutely any moving object, except for themselves.

Skills
Dragon fish gain a +4 racial bonus to Listen, Spot, and Hide checks. They gain an additional +8 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in murky water.

Treasure
Dragon fish keep no treasure, however they are a delicacy in Five Fingers and the surrounding areas, and restaurant patrons will pay heavily for them. A fisherman crafty enough to catch some can expect to sell them for 3 to 10 gp a fish (restaurants sell them for double to triple that). Their teeth are also highly sought after as needles for their extreme sharpness and unique flexibility (handy in some crafts). They typically sell for as much as 1 gp apiece; there are several dozen in a mouth, though many will be damaged.

Legends & Lore
COMMON: Dragon fish are deadly aquatic predators that are typically found in fresh waters.

UNCOMMON: Despite their small size, their bite is deadly, and when a school of them frenzy, the circumstances are grave.

RARE: Dragon fish only frenzy when there’s blood in the water, although once they do frenzy they will attack and eat just about anything.

OBSCURE: Ochre powder, a rather common mineral used in mortars, burns the eyes of the dragon fish, and if poured into the water will scare them off instantly.

Hooks
The Smoking Goblet, a middle of the road restaurant in Five Fingers, has recently changed ownership as the eldest of the Portham brothers passed away. The younger brother Chase has taken over the business, but unfortunately he completely lacks the business sense of his late elders. He has declared this month “Dragon’s Tooth Month” and is offering plates of dragon fish (prepared with the house’s secret recipe) at the bargain price of a crown a plate, and the entire town has turned out to eat each night, cleaning him out usually before evening even starts. Chase is desperate for fisherman with the guff and skill to catch him a mother lode of dragon fish, and he will pay quite handsomely for it (wasting his inheritance in the process).
Dragons

Of the extraordinary fauna all through this tome, there is one entity of the kingdoms that I would relegate not to add. Moreover, it merits an entry akin to its magnitude. This is a creature—if I dare call it such—that dwarfs all other things of the world short of the gods themselves, a creature so deadly and unspeakable that the very mention of such draws out awe in men, elves, and dwarves alike. It is the dragon. Fortunately they are few in number and appear to dislike proximity to civilization.

Elven works of art illustrate the dragon, ancient dwarven codices make mention of it, and men whisper fearfully of the beasts and their ilk. In my possession is a rare volume of The Wyrmaga Cycle. A passage reads:

"...And I, wakening at the sight of the land said waste,
Witnessed the Black Wyrm fell then join us,
Born up two more were eight,
And all went screaming into the mane,
Swords and spears were nothing to it,
And their thighs were healed from the bane.
The great Blight-Bringers, the terrible Father of Dragons, Toruk of the Black Scale had been beckoned, Defending his Mountain on the T ile..."

—Book I, The Wyrmaga Cycle

More than mere legend and far from just “wyrm,” some dragons have been regarded by men of ages past as gods. Indeed, their power is such that entire civilizations have been destroyed, others enslaved—or blighted—by the will and actions of such beings. Today, dragon-worship is limited to the island kingdom of Cryx, for in that dark corner of the realm the dark dragon Toruk reigns supreme. Without a doubt, he is both powerful and ancient, and he relishes the homage paid unto him. A church exists in his name on theisle, and the dragon grants power to his priests just the same as Morrow gifts his own devoted clergy. His following hails him as the Father of All Dragons and the oldest of gods; they say all lesser dragons are his spawn, and I once read a grisly flesh-bound tome delineating a peculiar lineage that suggests these dark tales may hold some truth.

If I recall correctly, it is believed that thousands and thousands of years ago, Toruk decided to create servants worthy of him—men and elves were unworthy, despicable creatures so he brought forth from his own blood the very first dragon brood. These he made in his image and nurtured them, but once they had grown, their hunger was too great and they sought to be free of Toruk’s dominion. The dragons rebelled and there was a great struggle. In his rage and indignation, Toruk destroyed all but a handful of his progeny, but these few escaped into the world and went into hiding for millennia. Toruk searched the realm but they were hidden deep within the earth, so eventually the Father of Dragons engaged in other matters and seemed to forget his disloyal brood. Over several thousands years, the young dragons grew powerful, until finally their hunger forced them to sink up from their earthen lairs and establish their own territories. Eventually, they attacked one another, for the dragons knew that in consuming their brethren, they would grow in power (a point of interest I will touch further upon in a while). But in this new havoc, Toruk easily found his offspring and once more fell upon them with a vengeance. It took an alliance of all the children to drive away the father, and so the progeny made a pact that if Lord Toruk were ever among them again, they would drop their quarrels and join against him who had made them. And it is said this alliance of dragons exists to this very day.

Some delves I have met over the years allege their paths have crossed with dragons, but most of these claims I eventually uncover as misleading. In fact, I have never encountered one up close and personal, nor do I wish to, though I have seen them from afar and witnessed the effects of their presence firsthand. It was the very dragon mentioned above, Toruk the Mighty Lord of Dragon—or at least I believed it so—who was suddenly winging through the clouds above while my party and I hid among the rocks and brambles of the Cryxian badlands. Having heard his terrible roar echoing throughout the vale, dulling my blood and touching my soul in ways no other beast or monster ever has, I can now tell the difference between those who have seen an actual dragon and those who have encountered one of the many creatures of the realm often confused for one. Dracodiles or the various breeds of Drake or tatzymburm, or even the fear-inducing dune prowlers of the Bloodstone Marches, they have all been mistaken for dragons one time or another, but I can tell you they most assuredly are not.

The Wyrmaga Cycle was penned shortly after the Ogoth landed on our shores. It was in those days while the coastlands endured invasion that Toruk chose to assault western Cryxian, a people already beset and weakened. Where the ancient dragon fairly before this, only he could say, but I suspect he came from the east, from beyond the dreaded Stormlands. His motives for founding Cryx and ruling as a god-king are similarly obscure, but it is clear he has a devious desire for conquest and enslavement. For over a thousand years the western mainland has lived with the dragon’s covetous eye upon them.
yet the dragon’s patience outruns the lives of men. He appears to only grow stronger with each century, twisting the islands into a nightmare by his very presence.

Indeed, my visit to Cryx revealed a warped and barren scene. This was Toruk’s territory, and nature had given way, as if made ill by the influence of the Father of Dragons. In many places the soil was black as burnt embers; rivers were cold and dark; tree trunks coiled like petrified serpents, and brambles choked everything within their thorny clutches. Even where the squallid inhabitants managed to erect a farmstead, the crops were withered and unpleasing to behold, corn of strange colors and blotted kernels, wheat colored purple like a bruise. Even the wildlife is twisted and sickly, and the closer we traversed to the dragon’s obsidian fortress on the black mountain, the worse everything became. It is said the smugglers of Blackwater pay well for food from the mainland. Now I can see why.

But the blight is not always easily detected. In fact, most of the inhabitants of its dark cities pass for normal, at least in the physical sense. Still, the blight seems to have seeped into their minds, for these denizens of these cities are often twisted and cruel and prone to malice, and they all—each and every one—speak as terrified yet awestruck fanatics in reverence of their deity and master, the black-scaled Lord Toruk.

Aside from the blighted and even beyond that twisted island and its corrupted populace, other terrible creatures, tainted as it were by the influence of the dragon, roam Immoren. It is rumored that minons are created from the dragon’s very blood, in fact, and these “dragonspawn” follow the bidding of their master without question. Indeed, records of a dragon’s territory encroaching upon the borders of Cygnar tell of sightings of draconic servitors. The militia of the west is known for employing bands of spawn-hunters, and these specialists venture into the dragonlight, attacking and exterminating the spawn and the blighted. The muddled journal of such a spawn-hunter, one Baingrave Bowmanste—an obviously semi-literate and blusterly bravado—tells of not one dragon but two in the far-flung north roughly two centuries past. As best I can translate, these dragons clashed in a territorial dispute in the mountains that are now both Khador and Ridual and the skirmishes of the beasts and their spawn laid waste to many civilized areas over the years. Bowmanste repeatedly boasts about his influence and good fortune during this time, yet the journal ends rather abruptly for whatever reason, leaving me to ponder why the dragons ceased their recurring battles and withdrew to their individual lairs.

The dwarves of Ridual call the dragon of their region Skyllfangen (known as Scaefang to others), a black-scaled monster that has, fortunately, not been seen or heard from in well over a century. The people of Khador have legends of the “female” dragon Halfaug: to be exact, I should say this is a likely misnomer, as dragons are sexless and spawn asexually—a topic broached later in this passage. The winter elves called the Nyss refer to the same beast as Glyssington; whatever her name, she is recorded as a massive silvery terror that eventually turned her attentions upon the inhabitants of those frozen mountains. Blood was shed by the winter elves in the thousands, and entire tribes were lost to the dragon’s ferocity and guile. It was not until a great coalition of men and Nyss—the first and only of its sort—campaigned into Halfaug’s lair, that she was sent fleeing northward into the icy fens of the Windless Waste. To this day, that mirror-scaled terror has not been seen, but lately there have been whispers of a dark and winged shape looming over those hoary peaks north of the towering timberlands called the Scarfells. Many fear the worst: that either Halfaug has returned to claim the north, or that Scaefang, Lord of the Black, has emerged from some deep, dark lair. Either would be
As stated above, I have witnessed the effects of dragonsight, and I have felt the icy grip of a supernatural fear emanated by these great beasts. I have never witnessed the effects of their breath, but I have read about immense golems of flame and rolling clouds of burning fog baked from a massive, toothy maw; flame and fog that has melted flesh and sinew, seared arms and armor, even devastated fleets of wide-beamed Orkbrorth galleons. One passage from Book II of The Wyrmage Cycle reads:

"...And the vast, magnificent beast smote the Ceyyan fleet with bolts of his sandbar wings and therefrom unleashed burning oil from his terrible stout that burned the very rocks of the great coast for seven nights and seven days."

The above passage in particular brings to mind a beast called Blightghast, a dragon of ancient pedigree roaming the Wyrmwall Mountains of Oygen. Miners from Orven claim to have seen this beast. They report it fairly in the twisted peaks north of Highgate, an area infested with boggers, trolls, and drakes, and avoided by all who claim to know these mountains. I would have dismissed the rumors as drake sightings, but for evidence of these blightghast beasts brought back by rangers on patrol from Highgate and countless reports of a bright colored fog rolling down the mountains that burns like fire. Broadly, have I viewed evidence of beasts slain by the rangers, and firsthand have I seen the ghastly burn marks on the flesh of woodsmen and the gruesome, cooked corpses of two wayward huntermen. The surviving woodsmen's skin was blistered, their eyes burned shut, and they retched horribly. I consulted with the camp chirurgeon who told me they were suffering from internal and external bleeding and that the mucous membrane of their bronchials was utterly destroyed. This was extremely painful for them to endure, and the ailing men had to be strapped to their beds. It took them four weeks to die. The chirurgeon told me: "I wish those fools in the militia who talk about going on with this expedition whatever it costs could see the men suffering from this baffling poison. Great mustard colored blisters, blood eyes, all sticky and stuck together, always fighting for breath, with voices a mere whisper, gasping and saying their throats are closing. You can't fight the Seether. No one can. This dragon, it's unstoppable... and honestly... I don't know how much longer I can stand this."

In further support of my theory regarding Blightghast’s residence in Ceygan, some 50 years ago an old miner related a tale to me of a peculiar card-and-mouse game, a strange legend of a man—or perhaps it was an elf—who contested a dragon with magic for the span of several decades upon the peaks of the Wyrmwall. The truth of this tale I find difficult to credit, but the root of it is a reoccurrence in many dragon tales they tend to toy with mortals—even powerful ones—for their own devilish ends. Old miners throughout the west think this dragon keeps a vigil from its mountain peak, gazing toward Ceyx. If this is in truth Blightghast the Seether, it can only be guessed that he peers westward toward the attack by the renowned Father of Dragons.

If my resources are accurate—I take pride in the fact they often are—and if I were to harbor a guess, the Seether, and the rest of his kin for that matter, must remain vigilant for one thing above all others: an attack by one of their own. Skoty would likely mean death if one such as Blightghast did not often keep his draconic wits about him, for above all things dragons hunger for other dragons. It has to do with the very source of their lineage, the powerful, immortal lifestones (see "About Lifestones"). In each dragons heart is a large fist-sized gem of sorts. These are shards from the very heart of the Father of Dragons, Lord Toruk. I have read they emanate a foul aura and it is my belief that these lifestones are the very source of the dragonslight effect and exceedingly powerful:

The coverings hide us touch it not!
The stone glistened softly there,
Amidst the ruined heart of the dead wyrm.
It shimmered, a thing of pure evil.
And as we company we raised our gauntlets
[to shield our eyes];
And whispered oaths to the creator
While the pains bent and blackened,
And the voices of the dead fell from on high.
Raub Prince Arworn charged his banners take it up.
But their hearts failed as a warrior reigned,
And his flame was snuffed in a trice.

Book II, The Wyrmage Cycle

It is surmised that extreme cold might have some type of effect on the lifestones, but what this effect may be I cannot say. Unfortunately, the Wyrmage does little to enlighten us as those who have read the translations know well that the doomed cover never made it into the northlands:

The coverings conjured a crescent slain,
And the scheme was placed therein.
To conclude this entry, I have crossed the lands north to south and east to west and have seen creatures both terrible and magnificent to behold. Of all of these I can say in honesty, dragons are to be feared the most. I’d rather engage in a kilmuck duel with a pistol wrath, than the companionship of a dozen elderdrakes tethered before a stampede of brazen buffalos with nothing but a dagger in my teeth, or even chance the notion of gambling for my soul with an Infernal before acquiring the interest of one of Immoren’s most terrible and magnificent beasts, the immortal, almighty dragon.

Combat

All dragons possess the following attacks and abilities from MME hire, claw, wings, tail, spit, crush, tail sweep, grappling, breath weapon, frightful presence, immunities, spell resistance, blindfight, and keen senses. They are all considered to be of age category 12 for determining things such as range and duration. See the MM for more information.

All dragons also have the following abilities:

Dragonblight (So): The evil dragons of Caer warp and tint the land and creatures around them. The dragonblight may extend for miles around their lair, depending on the age and power of the dragon. Effects of the dragonblight include tainted water, stunted vegetation, fouled crops and game, stillborn infants, and strange weather patterns. The presence of a dragonblight on a creatures is represented by the "blighted" template below. A dragon’s blight zone depends on the dragon’s Hit Dice; the zone extends one mile for every Hit Dice the dragon has. The blight takes time, however. A dragon must settle or rest in one area before the blight has any noticeable effect. For the first 240 rounds anything within several feet of a settled dragon blights, and then it grows, spreading a mile a time every 1D4+1 days, until it reaches the dragon’s maximum blight zone.

Regeneration (Ex): A dragon’s normal damage on dragons. All other damage regenerates at the rate of 20 hp per round.

Immunity (Ex): All dragons are immune to fear.

---

About Lifestones

A large fist-sized, shimmering gemstone pulsates within each dragon’s heart. According to Orghon lore, this is called an athan. If the athan is also referred to as a ‘lifestone’ is mistakenly left within the dead body of a dragon’s corpse, the beast will regenerate in just a few days. If the athan is taken, it will eventually hatch, producing an infant dragon, or wormling. Over the next few years, the wormling will undergo accelerated growth into an adult dragon. It is believed this progression may be hastened, slowed, or stepped in various ways.

—Place the athan in ice to prevent regeneration.
—Place the athan or small dragon in very extreme heat, such as a volcano, to accelerate regeneration and growth.
—Place it in a special magic container to stop or accelerate growth.

If one ever has the opportunity to vanquish a dragon, always get the athan, but never physically touch it. It is the source of the dragonblight. It is pure evil. Destroying an athan may well be impossible—they are extraordinarily durable; entire constellations of wizards have tried and failed. It is suggested the athan be placed in a magically created (or at least lead-shielded) carrier, and then an expert should be sought and consulted without delay.

One last note: It appears that athans are good fate among dragons for they seek one another with the idea in mind to consume the other’s lifestone. This is evidently the primary conflict among dragonkind. If a dragon seizes its Kin and purges down its athan, it is said the feeder gains much power from doing so.
Dragons

Scaefang

Colossal Dragon (Fire)

Hit Dice: 4d12 + 800 (950 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+1 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 40 ft., fly 200 ft. (clumsy)
AC: 47 (-8 size, +45 natural)
Attacks: Bite +52 melee, 2 claws +47 melee, 2 wings +47 melee, tail slap +47 melee
Damage: Bite 4d8 + 17, claw 4d6 + 8, wing 2d8 + 8, tail slap 4d6 + 25
Face/Reach: 40 ft. by 40 ft./25 ft.
Special Attacks: Breath weapon, crush 4d8 + 25, deathblast, frightful presence, tail sweep 2d8 + 25
Special Qualities: Blindsight 360 ft., dragonblight, damage reduction 20/+3, immunities, keen senses, regeneration 20, SR 33
Saves: Fort +33, Ref +21, Will +34
Abilities: Str +45, Dex 11, Con 35, Int 31, Wis 32, Cha 35
Skills: Appraise +58, Balance +48, Bluff +60, Climb +63, Escape Artist +48, Hide +6, Intimidate +60, Intuit Direction +59, Jump +25, Knowledge (geography) +58, Knowledge (history) +58, Listen +56, Search +56, Sense Motive +59, Spot +56, Swim +55, Wilderness Lore +59

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 60
Alignment: Neutral evil
Advancement: Special

"The flames of many sloth [souls] have been snuffed where the Lord of the Black dwell in the darksome valley, in that place where all light death disperses as smoke to wind."

— Unknown author

Scaefang is a massive, black-scaled beast with barbed, leathery wings and teeth that is larger than the largest man and black as pitch. A number of pure evil surrounds his form, and his hateful gaze glows sometimes purple, sometimes red. In addition to emulating fear like all of his kind, he also secretes a fog of ash that has been called "unlight," and to touch or inhale it is certain death. The ash actually settles in chests and, once cool, hardens into a coal-like substance that can be touched, but when burned it gives off the same hot ash similar to Scaefang's terrible breath, the fiery deathblast.

Scaefang is also called the Soul Eater, the Ravager, and the Lord of the Black. Dwelvers have a variant spelling of this dragon's name: Scylfingan (shul-lon-gen).

Breath Weapon (Su): Scaefang's breath weapon, called deathblast, is a cloud of ash and burning embers. This cloud deals 25d10 points of damage. Reflex save DC 44. The cloud moves away from the point at which it was released and in the direction in which it was directed at a movement rate of 20 feet and continues moving for 50 rounds. Strong winds can disperse the cloud, and water is an effective barrier against its effects.

Deathblast (Su): As a standard action, Scaefang may emit a cloud of ash possessing the same qualities as his breath weapon. It inflicts 4d10 points of damage per round to any that come within its 170-foot radius (Fortitude save, DC 44). This cloud will cling to the ground if struck or toed, and will remain active for 45 rounds after it is shed. It will then cool and solidify into a dark coal-like substance that, when burned, will give off a cloud of deathblight. One chunk of roughly 6 inches in diameter will yield a 20-foot cloud that deals 2d10 points of damage per round (Fortitude save, DC 24) and persists for 1d4+1 rounds.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Radius: 360 feet, affects creatures less than 45 HD, DC 44.

---

Blighterghast

Colossal Dragon (Fire)

| Hit Dice: | 4d12+800 (1032 hp) |
| Initiative: | +4 (+4 Improved Initiative) |
| Speed: | 40 ft., fly 200 ft. (clumsy) |
| AC: | 52 (–8 size, +50 natural) |
| Attacks: | Bite +68 melee, 2 claws +63 melee, 2 wings +63 melee, tail slap +63 melee |
| Damage: | Bite 4d8+20 claw 4d6+10, wing 2d8+10, tail slap 4d6+30 |
| Face/Reach: | 40 ft. by 40 ft./25 ft. |
| Special Attacks: | Breath weapon, crush 4d8+30, frightful presence, hell shroud, tail sweep 2d8+30 |
| Special Qualities: | Blindsight 360 ft., dragonblight, damage reduction 20/-3, immunities, keen senses, regeneration 20, SR 34 |
| Saves: | Fort +40, Ref +23, Will +35 |
| Abilities: | Str 50, Dec 10, Con 40, Int 33, Wis 30, Cha 35 |

Skills:

- Appraise +62, Balance +51, Bluff +63, Climb +71, Escape +63, Intimidate +63, Intuit Direction +61, Jump +71, Knowledge (geography) +62, Knowledge (history) +62, Listen +58, Search +58, Sense Motive +61, Spot +58, Swim +71, Wilderness Lore +61

Feats:

- Alertness, Cleave, Endurance, Flyby Attack, Great Cleave, Great Fortitude, Hover, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Multiattack, Power Attack, Snatch, Wingover

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 66
Alignment: Neutral evil
Advancement: Special
"Maintaining my calm, I directed the leeward and his mates to weigh the anchor, then called the lookout to bring her around and be by the wind. We forged ahead in hopes of see the land at Highgate, but it was a fair distance yet. Everything skilled as the Old Ravager followed. I heard young Paljan oiler, Lethal sisters, cry out, "And there I did see an object beyond on the horizon that spelled our doom."

— Captain Leukas Ganster, logs of the Sea Raven

Blighterghast is an ancient, amber-colored beast with a maw the span of a lone-masted war sloop and pearl-colored talons as long as an Oredic destrier. He is well known for his other undeniably and the deep orange webbing of his wings. In addition to emanating fear, Blighterghast emits a pungent and toxic aura that sailors claim off-heralds his arrival; it is a strong smell like "hot pepper on the wind," according to the log of one Captain Leukas Ganster. I gather this is a quality of Blighterghast's breath, a smoldering and reeking naphtha referred to by many as hell's acid.

Blighterghast is also called the Seetheer, the Old Ravager, the Boiler of Seas and at least a hundred other names by seamen and occupants in the vicinity of White Bay and the Broken Coast.

Breath Weapon (Su): Blighterghast's breath weapon, called hell's acid, is an adhesive naphtha that deals 2d10 points of damage. Reflex save DC 49. The following round anything hit by the naphtha additionally takes 1d10 points of damage (DC 49). A full-round action can be spent attempting to extinguish the flames (Reflex save, DC 49) before additional damage is taken. Immersion in water extinguishes the flames.

Hell Shroud (Su): As a standard action, Blighterghast may excrete an acidic massma that obscures vision and burns flesh. The cloud inflicts 5d10 points of damage per round to any that come within its 180-foot radius (Fortitude save, DC 49) and also possesses obscuring qualities of the fog cloud spell (caster level 48). Blighterghast may also blow the cloud in the direction he wants it to go, flinging it with his wings, or release it mid-flight, whereupon it will travel in the direction he was flying. The hell shroud has a movement rate of 30 feet and lasts for 50 rounds.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Radius: 360 feet. affects: creatures less than 48 HD, DC 46.
Halfaung

Colossal Dragon (Fire)
Hit Dice: 40d12 + 400 (800 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 60 ft., fly 300 ft. (poor)
AC: 43 (-8 size, +1 Dex, +40 natural)
Attacks: Bite +55 melee, 2 claws +50 melee, 2 wings +50 melee, tail slap +50 melee
Damage: Bite 4d8+15, claw 4d6+7, wing 2d8+7, tail slap 4d6+22
Face/Reach: 40 ft. by 40 ft./25 ft.
Special Attacks: Breath weapon, crush 4d8+22, frightful presence, scaring aura, tail sweep 2d8+22
Special Qualities: blindsight 360 ft., dragonblight, damage reduction 20/+3, immunities, keen senses, regeneration 20, SR 30
Save: Fort +27, Ref +21, Will +25
Abilities: Str 40, Dex 13, Con 29, Int 30, Wis 25, Cha 27
Feats: Alertness, Dodge, Flyby Attack, Hover, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Multiattack, Mobility, Power Attack, Snatch, Wingover
Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 49
Alignment: Chaotic evil
Advancement: Special

“Morrow, deliver us from the ravages of that wicked beast! No longer consent to the shepherd’s suffering her taking of the calf. No longer concede the toiler enduring the penitence of the field. We beseech you! Give us deliverance from the fiery shadow of the Frost Mother! Spare your people the ruin of dragons!”

— Kihard inscription upon an unearthed tablet, 797 B.R.

Halfaung is reputed to be an offspring of Scafang’s; she is a spry dragon with black and silver wings and reflective scales that change from black to silver depending on the light. She is described in Boreman’s Annotated Wyrmage and Studies of the Owl of the Northern Territories as a sleek creature with rakish silver claws and of “…such a swiftness in the other she doth outpace her very shadow.” In addition to fear, Halfaung emanates “a stifling heat that did turn their spears and armor to slag and death did befall them as the warband choked, their final gasps stifled by intense shards of crimson flame in their ears, throats, nostrils, and eyes…”

Halfaung is also called Wyrmthief, Frostfire, the Frost Mother, and curiously the Preserver, which I can only guess came about as entire beings were found in the far reaches, encased in ice. Of note, a lewed and age-old Khadoran appellation exists, pinning her as Old Whorecraft, and of even further note, the Nips refer to her in their native tongue as (lysingfor, which means either “Great Fire Wolf” or “Great Fire Wyrm,” if memory serves.

Breath Weapon (Su): Halfling’s breath weapon is a 70-foot cone of smoldering fire that deals 2d10 points of damage.
Reflex save DC 39.

Seizing Aura (Su): As a standard action, Halfling may emanate an aura of extreme heat (150-foot radius) that is hot enough to liquify metal, let alone flesh. This aura inflicts 2d10 points of damage per round. Fortitude save DC 39.
Unattended, nonmagical items get no saving throw to resist being destroyed by the intense heat. Enchanted items are allowed a saving throw. An item in a character’s possession gets the character’s saving throw, unless its own is higher.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Radius: 360 feet, affects: creatures less than 40 HD, DC 38.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: These ancient beasts of legend indeed exist, and the mightiest of the mighty is Lord Iorks, the Father of Dragons, who lives in a massive black tower on the Isle of Cryx.
UNCOMMON: All dragons defile their surroundings, as they are anomalous creatures given to paranoia and misery. This blight affects and warps all living things in its radius or flora makes no matter.
RARE: Dragonblood is a poison that alters the form. The beasts use their lifeforce to create their servitors, the twisted, malefic dragospawn.

OBSCURE: To destroy a dragon, one must destroy its lifestone, or it will regenerate into a newborn dragon. Extreme cold may have some destructive or torpor-inducing effect on a lifestone, and, conversely, heat quickens the regenerative process; this is more believed than proven.

Treasure

Dragons are ancient beasts that have amassed prodigious treasures. Among their treasures are immense gems, ancient coins, rare magical items, and often the bones of those to whom these treasures once belonged. Treat these finds as at least double the standard amount.

Hooks

Cygnaan scouts emerge from the wooded foothills at the base of the Wyrnwall, bedraggled, bleeding, and burned. They have comrades who have both been slain and captured back in those woods and implore for aid in rescuing any of those who live. They had been investigating reports of dark and twisted creatures lurking in the wood, but were not prepared for what they found. Several dozen dragonblighted soldiers have a hold-fast at the base of a lofty mountain. Escorted by a grizzled honor in search of dragospawn, the scouts attempted to oust them but failed, and the spawn hunter was captured. They tell of a distant mining in the mountains beyond that made their hairs stand on end, and a brewing fog that closed down the mountainsides and rolled over them (burning said hairs off).
Dragonspawn

Dragons have the ability to spill their own blood in order to create millions of undying loyalty—the dragonspawn. The dragon does this at will; it never happens spontaneously. The number of dragonspawn and their Hit Dice is determined by the dragon’s Hit Dice. A dragon can create a number of Hit Dice worth of spawn equal to the dragon’s Hit Dice, but no spawn may ever have more than one-fourth the dragon’s Hit Dice (rounded down). For example, Halfaraq, a 40 HD dragon, could create two 10 HD spawn and four 5 HD spawn (totaling 20 HD), but no more. Doing so comes at no cost to the dragon, unless the dragon is injured to below half of its hit points, at which point the spawn’s hit points are pulled directly from the dragon. The dragon may opt to eat any of its spawn, however, and regain the lost hit points. Dragonspawn, no matter what their form, are considered magical beasts (see MM for more information).

All spawn possess the following abilities:

Blindsight (Ex): Despite having no eyes, a dragonspawn can ascertain everything within 80 feet as though it were sighted.

Immunities (Ex): Dragonspawn are immune to fear, sleep, and paralysis effects.

Dragonspawn Features

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Legs</th>
<th>1d6 Roll</th>
<th>Feature</th>
<th>Arms</th>
<th>1d6 Roll</th>
<th>Feature</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>1-2</td>
<td>Biped, no tail</td>
<td></td>
<td>1-2</td>
<td>Two arms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>3-4</td>
<td>Quadruped, with tail</td>
<td></td>
<td>3-4</td>
<td>Two arms and wings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>5</td>
<td>Snake-like tail, no legs</td>
<td></td>
<td>5-6</td>
<td>No arms, with wings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>6</td>
<td>Biped, with tail</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Size</th>
<th>Claw Damage</th>
<th>Bite Damage</th>
<th>Movement*</th>
<th>Base Hit</th>
<th>AC</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Fine</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>5 ft., fly 20 ft. (good)</td>
<td>1/8 d10</td>
<td>+2 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diminutive</td>
<td>1d2</td>
<td>1d2</td>
<td>10 ft., fly 40 ft. (good)</td>
<td>_d10</td>
<td>+3 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tiny</td>
<td>1d3</td>
<td>1d3</td>
<td>20 ft., fly 40 ft. (good)</td>
<td>_d10</td>
<td>+4 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Small</td>
<td>1d4</td>
<td>1d4</td>
<td>20 ft., fly 40 ft. (good)</td>
<td>1d10</td>
<td>+5 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medium-size</td>
<td>1d6</td>
<td>1d6</td>
<td>30 ft., fly 60 ft. (poor)</td>
<td>2d10</td>
<td>+7 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Large</td>
<td>1d8</td>
<td>2d4</td>
<td>40 ft., fly 70 ft. (poor)</td>
<td>4d10</td>
<td>+10 natural</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huge</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>40 ft., fly 80 ft. (poor)</td>
<td>8d10</td>
<td>+12 natural</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

*Fly movement is only if spawn has wings.

Regeneration (Ex): Acid inflicts normal damage on dragonspawn. All other damage regenerates at the rate of 2 hp per round.

Special Abilities

Ability
None

Same breath weapon as creator, damage equal to one-fourth spawn’s HD, duration (if any) equal to spawn’s HD (in rounds).

Same aura or emanation as creator, damage and duration same as spawn breath weapon above.

Spell resistance equal to spawn’s HD-2.

Damage reduction equal to spawn’s (HD-2)/+1

Roll again on chart; spawn has multiple abilities, if 8 is rolled again, roll for another ability, and so forth.
Dragons

Sample Dragonspawn
This following is an example of Blightedghost’s spawn. It is hoop and feel wingless.

Large Magical Beast (Fire)

Hit Dice: 10d10+40 (95 hp)

Initiative: -1 (-1 Dex)

Speed: 40 ft.

AC: 19 (-1 Dex, +10 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +16 melee, bite +14 melee

Damage: Claw 1d8+7, bite 2d4+3

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.

Special Qualities: Breath weapon, damage reduction 8/+1, immunities, regeneration 2, scent

Saves: Fort +11, Ref +6, Will +2

Abilities: Str 24, Dex 8, Con 19, Int 3, Wis 7, Cha 8

Skills: Hide +10, Listen +3, Move Silently +2

Feats: Multiattack

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Any

Challenge Rating: 7

Alignment: Neutral evil

Advancement: None

before taking the additional damage (Reflex save, DC 19). Immersion in water will extinguish the flames.

The Blighted

Those that dwell close to a dragon for an extended period of time will notice an immediate and very apparent effect: they become blighted themselves.

The blighted, whatever their original forms, gradually begin to take on a more reptilian appearance. Their skin toughens and becomes scaly, often sprouting horns, bony ridges, and their eyes darken and assume a snake-like demeanor; giving them enhanced vision in the absence of light. Their teeth and nails sharpen to points, and their olfactory senses become razor sharp.

If a creature that is becoming blighted leaves the area of effect of the dragonblight, it ceases the transformation, but will once again begin changing should it re-enter the blight-zone. If the individual has consumed some of the dragon’s blood, however, the effects are irreversible and unstoppable.

The amount of time it takes for a creature to become blighted varies from dragon to dragon, but it is usually close to one year’s time of near constant exposure. A creature that has been living in a blight-zone for a time (designated by the individual dragon) must make a Fortitude save equal to 10 + the dragon’s Hit Dice + the dragon’s Constitution modifier. Some dragons have found a way to accelerate the blight by having their minions drink of their blood. This is a dangerous process; the drinker must make a Fortitude save equal to the dragon’s Hit Dice + the dragon’s Constitution modifier to simply survive the consumption of the blood. Success means that the imbiber is well on their way to becoming blighted and irrevocably dominated by the will of the dragon; failure obviously results in a particularly painful death. Partaking of the blood of a dragon has the effects of the dominate monster spell on the imbiber, with the caveat that if the dominated creature actually manages to make its saving throw to resist the effects of the dragon’s blood, the dragon can choose to exert its will once again the following round, if it so chooses. Inevitably, the dominated individual will concede to the dragon’s greater will.

Note that this is just one example of how dragonblight...
Creating a Blighted

"Blighted" is a template that can be added to any corporeal creature (henceforth referred to as the "base creature"). The template uses all the base creature's statistics and special abilities except as noted here.

Hit Dice: Same as base creature.

Speed: Same as base creature.

AC: +4 natural armor due to leathery, scaly skin.

Attacks and Damage: The blighted, if they didn't have any already, gain sharp claws and teeth. The damage of these attacks is listed below and corresponds to the creature's size. Creatures with natural attacks better than those listed below retain their old damage rating.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Size</th>
<th>Claw Damage</th>
<th>Bite Damage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Fine</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diminutive</td>
<td>1.2d</td>
<td>1.2d</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tiny</td>
<td>1.43</td>
<td>1.43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Small</td>
<td>1.64</td>
<td>1.64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medium-size</td>
<td>1.85</td>
<td>1.85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Large</td>
<td>2.06</td>
<td>2.06</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hinge</td>
<td>2.28</td>
<td>2.28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gargantuan</td>
<td>2.50</td>
<td>2.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colossal</td>
<td>2.72</td>
<td>2.72</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Special Qualities: The blighted gain the scent ability plus the following:

- Darkvision (Ex): The blighted gain darkvision 60 ft. If the base creature already has darkvision, it is now doubled.
- Immunities (Ex): Blighted creatures are immune to fear, sleep, and paralysis effects.
- Regeneration (Ex): Fire and acid inflict normal damage on a blighted creature. All other damage regenerates at the rate of 2 hp per round.
- Spell Resistance (Ex): The blighted gain spell resistance equal to their Hit Dice.

Saves: As base creature.

Abilities: The blighted gain +2 to Constitution, but suffer -4 to Wisdom.

Skills: As base creature.

Feats: The blighted gain the Alertness feat due to their heightened senses.

Climate/Terrain: Warm or temperate land

Organization: Any

Challenge Rating: As base creature +2.

Advancement: Same as base creature.

Sample Blighted

This sample uses a 5th level trollkin fighter as the base creature.

Trollkin

Medium-size Humanoid (Troll)

Hit Dice: 5d10+20 (47 hp)

Initiative: -1 (-1 Dex)

Speed: 30 ft.

AC: 13 (-1 Dex, +4 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +7 melee, bite +5 melee

Damage: Claw 1d4+2, bite 1d4+2

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., immunities, improved healing, poison resistance 4, regeneration 2, scent, SR 2, toughness

Saves: Fort +10, Ref +0, Will -1

Abilities: Str 14, Dex 8, Con 19, Int 11, Wis 7, Cha 8

Skills: Listen +7, Spot +7

Feats: Alertness, Great Fortitude, Multiattack, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (claw), Weapon Focus (bite)

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Solitary, gang (2–4), pack (2–6), band (20–40), blighted clan (80–160)

Challenge Rating: 7

Alignment: Lawful evil

Advancement: By character class
Dread

Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 5d12 (32 hp)
Initiative: -1 (-1 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 24 (-1 Dex, +15 natural)
Attacks: Handblade +8 melee
Damage: Handblade 1d8+5 melee
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Qualities: Undead, darkvision 60 ft., fear aura, damage reduction 5/+1, SR 28
Saves: Fort +6, Ref +2, Will +5
Abilities: Str 19, Dex 9, Con —, Int 11, Wis 12, Cha 10

Skills: Climb +7, Handle Animal +3, Jump +8, Ride +5, Swim +8
Feats: Alertness, Cleave, Combat Reflexes, Mounted Combat, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (Handblade)

Climate/Terrain: Any land
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 8
Alignment: Always neutral evil
Advancement: By character class

This example uses a 5th-level human fighter as the base creature.

O
of all that the ancient Ogoghi left behind, perhaps nothing speaks of their potential cruelty as plainly as the dread. These magically created abominations were designed as servants to the wealthy and powerful, though I fear they functioned more often than not as bodyguards and assassins.

Dread appear as horrifically mutilated humanoids, their blistered flesh interwoven with shards of shining metal and various weaponry, often completely replacing their hands and arms.

Used by Ogoghi commanders to instill fear on the battlefield and to terrify resistant populations into submission, squads of these creatures (often still recognizable as the persons they were in life) patrolled the streets after dark, rustling curfews were strictly followed. Dread were also used to guard Ogoghi fortresses, and in some remote ruins they may still lurk even today.

The creation of a dread of any kind is an abominably evil act and I cannot imagine where or how the Ogoghi perfected this perverted science. They were most often created with the sacrifice of powerful warriors and wizards captured by the empire. These fell creatures belong in the pages of history — but I regret to report that they have not remained there.

Indeed, the dread once more walk the kingdoms. I do not know who has gained the knowledge of their construction, but

I encountered one along the border of Ord not too long ago. It did not seem to be under direct command, and I found no master nearby. It may have been wandering aimlessly for hundreds of years, but after I slew the thing (it was a close call, let me tell you) it seemed... fresh.

CREATING DREAD

The process requires a Small, Medium, or Large living humanoid. The subject, who must be completely restrained, is prepared by the casting of resist elements (fire) followed by permanency upon their person.

A vat of 100 pounds of pure molten iron must be prepared, followed by a Craft (metallurgy) check (DC 25).

Once the subject has been adequately restrained, a hole is cut into his chest to the heart. The molten iron must be forcibly poured directly into the subject's still-beating heart for at least 266 rounds until it has been completely absorbed throughout the body. The molten metal causes 1d10 internal damage per round, regardless of the effects of resist elements.

After the subject reaches 0 hp and before death at -10 hp, the spells gate, reprieve, dominate person, and undead bond (requiring a black sapphire of 1,000 gp per HD) must be successfully cast upon him.
Finally, the dread is immersed in ice-cold water to set the metal used in its construction.

The metal superstructure of a dread provides it with armor-like protection from damage and may be enchanted to further increase its armor class. Weapons and other metal objects (such as climbing spikes, lantern holders, or shields) may be welded or similarly affixed to a dread's frame without causing it damage.

Hit Dice: d12
Speed: Same as the character.
AC: The dread has +15 natural armor.
Special Attacks: A dread retains all the character's special attacks and also gains those listed below.
Fear Aura (Su): Dread are shrouded in an aura of fear. Creatures in a 60-foot radius with less than 4 HD must succeed at a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 dread's HD + dread's Cha modifier) or be affected as though by fear as cast by a sorcerer of the dread's level.
Special Qualities: The dread retains all the character's special qualities and gains those listed below. It also gains the undead type.
Damage Reduction: Dread gain damage reduction 5/+1.
Turning Immunity (Ex): Dread cannot be turned or rebuked.
Spell Resistance (Ex): Dread gain spell resistance 28.
 Saves: Same as the character.
Abilities: Dread gain +2 to Str and suffer -4 to Dex. Being undead, dread have no Constitution score.
Skills: Same as character.
Feats: Same as character.

Combat

Dread are intelligent if uninspired combatants. If they are guarding an area with traps or natural hazards, they will attempt to lure invaders into them before moving in for melee combat.

Fear Aura (Su): See above.

Treasure

Dread may have enchanted weapons or other magic items bound to their iron bodies.

but they carry no treasure for its own sake. But more valuable would be any Orgoth lord that a dread may be guarding—there are a few ancient caches hidden within the Iron Kingdoms.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None

UNCOMMON: The Orgoth created zombie-like minions of flesh and iron as guards.

RARE: The mere sight of a dread, as these creations are known, can cause the bravest hero to flee in terror.

OBSOLETE: Dread are still being created today, by a small group of evil Cerylion wizards intent on rediscovering the Orgoth's arcane secrets.

Hooks

The underworld of a major city is abuzz with reports of a terrifying creature of flesh and iron. Have the local curpuses stumbled onto an ancient Orgoth ruin beneath their very feet—or has a crime lord begun creating his own dread in order to expand his territory?
Dregg

Medium-size Humanoid

Hit Dice: 2d8+2 (11 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 18 (+1 Dex, +4 natural, +3 armored plates)

Attacks: 2 claws +4 melee, bite +1 melee, or by weapon +4 melee
Damage: Claws 1d2+3, bite 1d4+1, or forearm blade 1d6+3 or longspear 1d8+3

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Qualities: Light sensitive, masochist, low-light vision, scent, wide-angle vision, damage reduction 5/+1

Saves: Fort +4, Ref +1, Will +1
Abilities: Str 16, Dex 12, Con 12, Int 8, Wis 8, Cha 10

Skills: Listen +2, Move Silently +2, Spot +2

Feats: Improved Initiative

Climate/Terrain: Any underground or nocturnal land
Organization: Squad (6–12), band (12–30), horde (40–100)
Challenge Rating: 2
Alignment: Usually chaotic evil
Advancement: By character class

There are not that many creatures out there that make me realize just how lucky we civilized peoples really are. It seems that in most cases nature has some way of keeping the dark abominations of the night in check, for without them we'd surely be overrun. It is the sun that saves us from the wretched dregg, and on a bright afternoon I often give silent thanks for it and for whatever servant of Morrow it was who saved us from their stygian depths.

We were traveling in northern Khador when we were captured. They struck at night while most of us slept, but my men still managed to put up a good fight. I've seen few terrors in combat like the dregg. Our weapons did little to harm their ragged bodies, and when we did hurt them it only made them more deadly. As I bashed the head off of one with a glistening pike he swayed with pleasure in its eyes. The chaos lasted only a few minutes, and in that time my band had been reduced to half its size. As the survivors feasted on the still-warm bodies of their companions, we were bound and led underground. There we discovered a whole world of tunnels and catacombs that seemed to stretch for miles. Just how far I care not to fathom, though the dregg's equipment—raided booty, all of it—seemed to come from all corners of the kingdoms.

There were some light sources down there by which I could see my captors, and I must say I've never witnessed anything like them. They are about the size of a normal human and bear normal humanoid appendages, but their bodies are as gaunt as could be imagined—the skin stretched so tight that in many places bone actually protrudes through, almost as if they'd been flayed. They had long bony snouts and bent lumbar, which gave them a feral grace. Their eyes were milky white and seemed capable of moving independently—a trait that makes them hard to surprise in combat. Their bodies were pierced with metal rings and bars all over, even through the bone, and I saw that many had fastened armored plates to these piercings. I've never seen a creature that seemed to be in a more painful natural state, though they seemed to revel in it.

Their speech was horrid—a sickly chortle punctuated by the sucking and chomping sounds of the tongue in the back of their throat. I couldn’t glean very much of their culture while I was captive. They stayed in groups; at times, it seems, and all that I witnessed were warriors of some sort. The leader of the band that attacked us was a true terror who fought with a pair of long wicked blades strapped to his forearms, and even his lieutenant, clearly a sorcerer by trade, was a wicked combatant as well. I can’t imagine what sort of horrid deity those beasts might worship, though I saw no overt signs of religion.

The only thing keeping these creatures in check is the sunlight. Their skin blisters sickeningly, and they fall to the ground helpless and weak after even a few minutes of exposure. Needless to say, it was the sun that came to our rescue that day. At the time I had acquired a small sunlight beamning clockwork locker. They had taken us into a crystalline cavern, which refracted and multiplied the light from my simple device. After we broke loose, much of it is a blur. Running, fighting, climbing, and eventually breaking the surface and thanking Morog that the sun had risen. The experience lent greater brilliance to the sight of a sunrise... and a dark apprehension to the sight of that same sun sinking into dusk...

Combat

Dregg are very skilled combatants. They always strike in groups, and they work well in a group dynamic, using well-coordinated attack patterns. They are rapids by nature, striking only at night (unless they are encountered underground), using guerrilla tactics where possible.

Light Sensitive (Ex): Dregg suffer -2 to initiative and attack rolls made in light stronger than torchlight. This penalty rises to -4 in extremely bright light. Direct sunlight is even more inhibiting, causing their skin to blister and doing 1d4 points of subdual damage per round. Dreggs rendered unconscious in this fashion won’t die of exposure, but won’t regain consciousness until it becomes dark again.

Masochist (Ex): Dreggs delight in physical pain, and it has quite an unusual effect on them. Any spells, abilities, or skills meant to specifically cause pain fail to have their normal effect on a dregg, and instead the dregg gains a +2 morale bonus to all attacks and saves until combat has ceased (or 2d4 minutes in non-combat situations). They also receive this bonus after losing the first 25% of their hit points (2 hp, as above) in combat (it does not stack per multiple effects). This bonus is lost immediately if the dregg is healed in any way.

Wide-angle Vision (Ex): Dreggs are able to move their eyes independently of each other. This wide range of vision makes it impossible to flank a dregg; rogues may still use sneak attack, however.

Treasure

Dreggs prefer treasure that has a direct military application, such as weapons, though they are known to keep anything that seems valuable when they commit a raid. Most items, however, are secreted away to well-hidden underground vaults. It is rumored that the wealth in some of these vaults would make the royal Cygnaran coffers seem like a beggar’s purse.

---

Legends & Lore

COMMON: A race of strange, bony humans that lives underground in many regions throughout the kingdoms.

UNCOMMON: The dreggs have an intense aversion to sunlight.

RARE: Dreggs revel in pain so much that it actually strengthens them, making them fierce combatants.

OBSOLETE: Dreggs are so vile that even Toruk, the Lord of Wyrm, has been unable to recruit them into his armies. In fact, they seem to have no allies whatsoever, attacking whoever and whatever they please.

---

Hooks

There have been dregg sightings in the Undercity of Cooriss, and people are disappearing. Unfortunately, the watch has been instructed not to investigate the matter, as a native official has it in his head that the dreggs will eliminate some of the underworld gang that have taken root there. If the dreggs are left unchallenged, however, Cooriss might face an infestation problem that could threaten the whole populace. Several of the underground gangs have banded together to fight the dreggs off before they take hold, and they’re looking for adventurers to join their ranks.
Dune prowlers are true terrors of the Bloodstone Marches. Able hunters both above and beneath the sands, they can be formidable foes and even valuable allies. They are more intelligent than they might first appear and are patient, even meticulous hunters.

Dune prowlers stand between 8 and 9 feet tall, with thick reddish skin covered in dark bristles. These bristles are sensitive to vibrations carried through the sand and aid in the location of prey. Besides their heightened senses and their ability to burrow, the dune prowler's weapons are its wicked claws and speed. Few men can withstand the blows of a dune prowler and fewer still can outrun one.

The most intriguing feature of the dune prowler however is its dorsal hump, which holds both water and air, allowing the beast to hunt beneath the sands for extended periods of time.

The dune prowler usually hunts from beneath the sands, only coming up for air hourly and the weekly drink of water. They seem to range across very specific yet extensive territories, only moving on from an area if there is no game to be found in the vicinity. They also keep lairs hidden away somewhere within their territory where they sometimes bring back coins and other goods.

A dune prowler's lair is quite an amazing site to see, being a meticulously constructed network of tunnels and chambers carved out of the Bloodstone Marches' crimson sandstone. The males of the species build these burrows in order to attract female companionship. The grander the den the more likely a mate will be found and kept.

Trinkets and baubles adorn the outer rim of each lair (I recommend not disturbing these ornaments), while further inside it is much more utilitarian. Beware, however, of entering a dune prowler's den; it is usually guarded, and if young are present, then the female stays in the lair while the male forages for food.

Another interesting trait of dune prowlers is their ritualistic battles over territory, lairs, and mates. One on one combat for dominance is a common occurrence among dune prowlers, but rarely results in the shedding of blood, though when blood is shed the battle becomes one to the death. These clashes are mainly for dominance and to set the hierarchy of a pack.
Though I have not seen a tamed dune prowler, my guide Quinut has told me that there are individuals that have trained them as beasts of burden and even mounts. I must say that I prefer my pack mules and horses.

Combat

Sand beasts are remarkable hunters, using the sands to conceal them from their prey. They relentlessly attack with both claws and bite. A dune prowler will usually retreat if it is suffering more damage than its prey. When hunting in packs dune prowlers use their reach and flanking to maximum effect.

Frightful Presence (Ex): The presence of a dune prowler can inspire fear in its foes. Whenever a dune prowler attacks, charges, or howls all creatures that can see the dune prowler must make a Will save (DC 15) or become shaken for 1d6 rounds.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability a dune prowler must hit with a claw attack.

Rend (Ex): A dune prowler that gets a hold rends its opponent's flesh, dealing an additional 2d6+7 damage.

Tremorsense (Ex): Sand beasts automatically sense the exact location of any moving object that is in direct contact with the ground within 120 feet.

Skills: A dune prowler, due to its coloration and affinity for burying itself in sand, receives a +10 racial bonus to Hide checks when in its native environment.

Treasure

Armor smiths can use dune prowler hides to make armor. Armor made from dune prowler hide has no special properties, though it is prized for its rarity and typically increases the value of the armor.

Also of note is the membrane found within the dune prowler’s hump. Once cured it makes about a dozen excellent waterskins worth about 5 gp each.

Finally, dune prowler eggs are considered a delicacy in some portions of the Iron Kingdoms and sell for about 5 gp each.

Hooks

- An armor smith who desires a batch of dune prowler hides for his business approaches the PCs. He is willing to pay for a small expedition to the Bloodstone Marches and has offered to share in the profits of the venture with the PCs.
- A caravan from Ternon Cray has gone missing, and the PCs are asked to find it and return its goods. When they come upon the abandoned caravan they find it has been ransacked by a pack of dune prowlers. It is up to the PCs to find any trinkets or baubles that the dune prowlers have brought back to their lairs.
The eldritch woods of Tros are a mysterious and secluded place, hiding many secrets yet to be discovered by the kingdoms of men. Not the least of those are the elves themselves, and my limited experience with them has led me across the path of many a mysterious and unexplained tale. One such legend was that of the Eldrich, a legend that eluded me for many years, though in time I would learn more of this one firsthand. My elven assistant, Ethan, had made passing reference to the tale of Vyros Thosser, an eldritch who had stumbled upon a dark temple and became a bound, warped being. On one darkened night, as the streets of Corvis, it was Vyros Thosser himself that I stumbled across... or I should say, who stumbled across me.

I'll not divulge the details of the encounter—I think I'm endangering myself enough just by including this entry—but I will impart a few details, should any of my readers stumble upon one of these vile abominations.

Eldrich are elves who live on in undeath. Though I've not discovered the reasons, there are many elders who show an intense fear of dying, and the eldritch is one result of that. These beings are seemingly approached by dark voices that tempt them to commit a horrible act against their brethren. live on eternally. Their bodies become warped; their skin shriveled and decayed, though in truth they are stronger and faster than they were in life. Smarter too, it seems, as eldrich are cunning creatures. They feed off the life essences of other living creatures and seem to be able to drain this energy in different fashions, as suits their whims. They also gain an increased affinity for magic, and I have witnessed their natural powers myself. Lastly, eldrich are capable of creating undead minions that they call sythys, which obey their master's will entirely.

For all of the mystery that surrounds the eldrich and the land they come from, know that they are evil. Completely and entirely. An eldrich lives to hunt the living, and lest someone puts it down, it will go on doing just that... eternally.

Creating an Eldritch

Eldritch is a template that can be applied to any elven creature. Its type changes to undead, and it gains all of the following abilities:

Hit Dice: Increase to d12
Speed: Same as base creature
AC: Gains +5 natural armor bonus
Damage: Eldrich gain a touch attack that uses negative energy to deal 2d4+6 points of damage to living creatures; a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 eldrich's HD + Charisma modifier) reduces the damage by half. Upon a successful touch attack the eldrich may also choose to use its ability score loss attack as well.

Special Attacks: Ability score loss, create sythys

Special Qualities: Undead, +4 turn resistance, darkvision 120 ft., damage reduction 15/+1, immunities, spell-like abilities, spell resistance, eldrich weaknesses

Saves: Same as base creature

Abilities: Increase as follows: Str +10, Dex +6, Int +2, Cha +4. As undead creatures eldrich have no Constitution score.

Skills: Eldritch receive a +6 racial bonus to Bluff, Disguise, Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Search, Sense Motive, Spot, and Use Magic Device checks.

Feats: Eldritch gain Alertness, Combat Casting, Improved Initiative, and Lightning Reflexes, assuming that the base creature meets the prerequisites and does not already have these feats.

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: Same as character +4

Alignment: Always neutral evil

Advancement: By character class
Eldritch Characters

Eldritch are always neutral evil, which causes characters of certain classes to lose their class abilities. In addition, certain classes suffer additional penalties and bonuses. Clerics and paladins lose their ability to cast divine spells and class abilities, but gain the following special abilities:

- Aura of Desecration (Su): This despoiling aura acts as a permanent desecrate spell centered upon the eldritch and emanating out to a range of 25 feet.
- Rebuke Undead (Ex): Eldritch gain the ability to rebuke undead as an evil cleric equal to their current cleric or paladin level with a +4 circumstance bonus to rebuke checks.
- Word of Despair (Su): This ability can be used once per day for each level of cleric or paladin the eldritch has and is considered to be a free action (but only once per round). With a single word the eldritch can cause overwhelming despair in an opponent, who must succeed a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 eldritch’s HD + Charisma modifier) or be paralyzed with fear for 1d4 rounds.

Sythyss

A sythyss is an undead servant created by an eldritch. They do not gain the horrid rotting changes that an eldritch undergoes, but they do gain a deathly pallor sometimes accompanied by other markings.

- Hit Dice: Increase to d12
- Speed: Same as base creature
- AC: Gains +2 natural armor bonus
Attacks: Sythys gain a slam attack
Damage: Slam 1d6
Special Qualities: Undead, darkvision 120 ft., immunities
Saves: Same as base creature
Abilities: Increase as follows: Str +4, Dex +2. As undead creatures sythys have no Constitution score.
Feats: Sythys gain Alertness, Improved Initiative, Toughness, assuming that the base creature meets the prerequisites and does not already have these feats
Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Solitary or gang (2-5)
Challenge Rating: Same as base creature +1
Alignment: Always lawful evil
Advancement: By character class

Combat

A sythys will obey its master's commands to the letter in combat.

Darkvision (Ex): This ability replaces the character's low-light vision and has a range of 120 feet.

Immunities (Ex): Sythys are immune to cold, electricity, and polymorph.

---

Eldritch Artifact: The Hand of Tadhg

The Hand of Tadhg is an ancient Ijoin artifact. It once belonged to an eldritch named Tadhg, an elf rumored by many to have been the first eldritch. He was slain by an elven hero of old, and during the battle the eldritch's hand was severed and cast aside. An unknown magician secreted the severed member away and fashioned it into a powerful artifact.

Any who wield the Hand of Tadhg become completely immune to ability score and energy (level) draining attacks. Furthermore, the wielder gains the eldritch's ability score drain ability as if he possessed it himself; it works exactly as described, and the user must make a successful touch attack to employ it. The touch attack need not be made with the artifact. The user gains no special benefit from draining ability scores, though rumors claim that if one drains enough, they'll turn into an eldritch as well.
I encountered this creature while at an Orgoth fortress archaeological dig. Several exquisite examples of weapons and armor had been unearthed in tunnels near Celtyl when the professor leading the excavation suddenly disappeared, followed by several diggers. Whispers began, the place was cursed.

Soon enough, well-coordinated thralls beset the dig. They knew where guards were posted and avoided them. One witness claimed they were dragging people alive, I rallied the guards and ventured into the deeper chambers. After several battles with the thralls, we encountered a ghoulish scene—an old Orgoth torture chamber, lovingly maintained and clearly having been recent use. The missing professor and workers were strapped to various devices that dripped fresh blood.

I heard a deepening giggle and spied a dark form floating next to the professor. This shadowy creature was draped in black rags, its face a strange metal mask with cruel steel teeth. Hanging from its rags was a variety of devices designed to cause suffering; and clamped in one clawed hand was such a device. The fiend set upon the professor, and we all felt an explosion of pain. Most of the guards huddled into fetal balls—weapons forgotten—as the attending thralls stepped forward.

Somehow I was able to fight off the pain. Dashing past the thralls and attacking the wraith, I knocked it away from the professor. This allowed my companions to gather their wits—but before we could finish it, the creature escaped through a small tunnel. I know not if it perished or continues its dark practice elsewhere.

Most excrutiators are centuries old and plan accordingly, finding permanent lairs where they have a ready supply of victims. They feed upon pain and can regenerate wounds by causing suffering. Excrutiators can last indefinitely without a victim, but become ravenous when deprived of...
Victims for longer than a year and sometimes clump into protracted periods of inactivity. Their strongest desire is to pry out each victim's deepest secrets, which they note in meticulous journals, written in archaic Orgoth or other forgotten tongues. Excruciators commonly know dozens of different languages and seem to have an innate knack for learning new ones.

Combat

The excruciator is an intelligent, self-willed undead capable of long-term planning. It uses lesser undead for defense and flees if overwhelmed, attacking again when circumstances are favorable. It prefers taking single victims alive and will employ its skill to wrest information from them about other potential victims or enemies. It is semi incorporeal, having physical limbs and weapons but no incorporeal torso. It walks slowly and stealthily but is able to fly well.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the excruciator must hit with its claw attack and can attempt this even on Medium-sized creatures. Subdual victims are usually strapped into a nearby torture device.

Lingering Torment (Ex): Excruciators can opt to make weapon and bite attacks as subdual instead of regular damage, with no penalty to hit. These subdual attacks are particularly painful; their weapons are all designed to maximize pain. Anyone suffering subdual damage from an excruciator receives a -4 circumstance penalty to Concentration or similar skill checks (which includes reloading a firearm).

Painwreck (Su): If not engaged in combat and the excruciator has an unexcuciated victim, it can cause projected pain onto anyone within a 60-foot radius who fails a Will save (DC 17). The excruciator must first succeed on a Profession (torturer) skill check at a DC of 18 + the Wisdom modifier of victim. The effect is exactly the same as the spell symbol of pain within the radius. If the excruciator succeeds the check by 10 or more, there is a -4 penalty to resist the effect. This lasts for an additional 2d4 rounds after the excruciator is interrupted.

Replenishing Sadium (Su): An excruciator can regenerate half the subdual damage it causes to others by inflicting its lingering torment ability upon them. Therefore, if an excruciator causes 10 points of subdual damage, it regenerates 5 hp.

Treasure

Although not attached to items, excruciators keep and store possessions owned by victims—which can accumulate into an impressive hoard. Their imaginative torture devices sell well to certain collectors. The oldest excruciators may also have valuable weapons or coins from the Orgoth Empire. The best treasure of the excruciator is its journal(s), some of which contain extremely valuable information to those who can translate them.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: These intelligent spirits haunt Orgoth ruins or sometimes relocate to other abandoned torture facilities. They choose halls that have functioning (or repairable) torture implements.
RARE: Victims killed by excruciators rise as thralls in service to them. More powerful undead are also sometimes enslaved into service.
OBSCURE: True excruciators arise from the evil souls of Orgoth torture masters, who conducted dark rites during interrogations. They know innumerable secrets of causing suffering and are keepers of much lore that has been lost. Excruicators can cause pain even to those who are normally immune. It may be possible to bargain to be spared by an excruciator by promising to bring other victims who know more valuable information.

Hooks

Adventurers are hired by an influential wizard of Ceryl to investigate an old Orgoth complex in the Wyrnwall Mountains. He seeks a number of books kept by the head inquisitor who had run the prisons. These are actually the journals of an excruciator, and the wizard is an infiltrant seeking lore for dark barter. Not only will the adventurers face the excruciator, but will have to deal with their employer—once the books are in his hands, he will try to eliminate them by summoning internal tyrants.
Farrow

Medium-size Humanoid (Farrow)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ability</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Strength (Str)</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dexterity (Dex)</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constitution (Con)</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Intelligence (Int)</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wisdom (Wis)</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charisma (Cha)</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Hit Dice: 2d8 + 6 (15 hp)

Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)

Speed: 30 ft.

AC: 17 (+1 Dex, +6 natural)

Attacks: Gore +1 melee, or greatclub +1 melee, or shortbow +1 ranged

Damage: Gore 1d8 + 1, or greatclub 1d10 + 1, or shortbow 1d6

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.

Special Qualities: Scent

Saves: Fort +6, Ref +1, Will +0

Abilities:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Skill</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hide</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listen</td>
<td>+4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Move</td>
<td>+7</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Skills:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Skill</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Silent</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Search</td>
<td>+5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spot</td>
<td>+5</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Feats: Alertness

Climate/Terrain: Any temperate land

Organization: Family (5–20)

Challenge Rating: 1

Alignment: Usually neutral

Advancement: By character class

---

The farrow are half-man, half-boar creatures that have the intelligence and wit of a man and the ferocity and terriity of a boar. A typical narrow stands at about the height of a man, but walks with a stooped posture that gives it a shorter appearance. Its body is covered with bristly dark hairs over similarly dark skin. Its arms end in mammish hands, and its feet end in cloven hooves found amongst common barnyard swine. The face is a strange mockery of human and boar: two surprisingly human-looking eyes set behind a large pig snout and enormous tusks jutting from the thing’s mouth. The tusks are more pronounced amongst the male members of the species and may serve as a sign of dominance, good breeding stock, or both. Whatever the case may be, the tusks also serve as particularly nasty natural weaponry.

While the farrow are not above and may actually prefer using the weaponry given to them by their ancestry, they also rely upon crude arms fashioned by themselves or more elaborate weapons pilfered from the bodies of slain enemies. Farrow are often seen sporting greatclubs fashioned from the thagh bones of great beasts and crude shortbows of wood and sinew or wielding the heavy iron weapons of the Iron Kingdoms, presumably taken from one of the victims of their incessant ambushes of foreign invaders.

The origin of these beasts is unknown and may remain so. Cygnaran scouts first sighted them several decades ago in Widower’s Wood. They’ve since been spotted ranging as far south as the Gallows Hills and as far north as the Merwyn region of Llael. Some believe there is a mad wizard lurking somewhere in the dark recesses of history that fed the need to tamper with nature and create these aberrations. They are not all bad, however. I had the pleasure of befriending Groth, a favored shaman of Widower’s Wood. If his name is indeed Groth I’m actually not certain, but when I asked for his name and he replied with a series of grunts and squawks, I decided to call him Groth.

I met Groth while I was hunting a particularly large draco- croc that had been terrorizing a swampy village. To hear the swampies talk, the creature must have been the size of Lord Toruk himself. I’d soon find out just how close to the truth they were. I had been searching fruitlessly for days when I heard the sound of something very large thrashing about in the water mere yards away from me. I investigated, my luckly bow at the ready, and saw what appeared to be a boa-like humanoid caught in the jaws of the largest dracodile I had ever seen! The only thing keeping the unfortunate creature from being eaten was a thick, rotten, laden staff stuck in the upper and lower jaws of the great lizard. I immediately decided that I couldn't allow such a tenacious creature to be eaten alive in front of me, and fired several arrows into the dracodile. That got its attention, and the brazen-man was able to escape its maw. Now, I waded in with sword and dagger to finish the beast off. What an exhilarating battle!

Afterwards, I was able to ask the creature its name and where it came from. I soon found that it was a 'he' and we decided that his name was Groth. He actually spoke a smudge of Cygnaran mixed in with all the grunting and squawking. Groth apparently was a shaman amongst his people, who live in the deepest reaches of Widower's Wood. This noble soul felt that he owed me a debt of gratitude for saving him from the dracodile and offered to enchant the hide of the beast to protect me should I run afoul of any more dracodiles in the wood. As I could not drag the enormous carcass out of the swamp—though I wanted to, what an enormous specimen—I agreed to allow Groth to fashion a suit of dracodile hide armor for me. I spent the next few days with Groth in his wattle and daub hut, and we became fast friends.

I occasionally wear the armor to this day—though it often smells of swamp gas on particularly hot, stagnant days—and always manage to pay Groth a visit whenever I venture into Widower's Wood.

Combat

The farrow prefer an ambush to all other forms of attack. They almost always ambush their prey long before their victims are anywhere near them. As the farrow commonly appropriate their victims' weapons as their own, any of the above weapons may be substituted with another.

Skills

Due to their unsurpassed sense of smell, the farrow receive a +4 racial bonus to Search and Spot checks.

Farrow Characters

The farrow's preferred class is barbarian, and most farrow chieftains are barbarians. Farrow shaman are usually adepts and prefer spells that aid in combat and stealth.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The farrow are half-man, half-beast monsters.

UNCOMMON: The barbaric farrow are little more than animals that have learned to walk upright.

RARE: The farrow are actually capable of moderate civilization. Some farrow tribes have been able to keep their stolen firearms in working order, but have yet to learn how to manufacture ammunition. Watch out for them when they are on the hunt for more bullets.

OBSCURE: The farrow were created centuries ago as a slave race for a deranged wizard.

Treasure

As the farrow are fond of raiding human caravans, adventurers will often discover various human-wrought items amongst a farrow's belongings. These may range from magical armor and weapons to far more mundane objects.

Hooks

The PCs are on a well-traveled Cygnaran highway when the farrow leap up from their hiding places on the roadside and ambush them! This particular tribe has been able to keep its plundered rifles in working order and is willing to use them on their newest target. PCs who investigate may learn that a human wizard leads the tribe and has been using them to advance his own mysterious agenda. DMs may wish to substitute the farrow's Alignment law with Evil, Weapon Proficiency (small arms).
Fog Drake

Large Magical Beast (Aquatic)

Hit Dice: 6d10 + 24 (57 hp)

Initiative: +4 (+4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 30 ft., swim 30 ft.

AC: 15 (–1 size, –6 natural)

Attacks: Bite +9 melee, 2 claws +7 melee

Damage: Bite 2d6+4, claw 1d6+2

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 10 ft. / 5 ft.

Special Attacks: Breath, improved grab

Special Qualities: Amphibious, fog breath, mist sight

Saves: Fort +9, Ref +5, Will +2

Abilities: Str 19, Dex 10, Con 18,

Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 15

Skills: Hide +3, Listen +3, Move Silently +3

Feats: Improved Initiative, Multiattack

Climate/Terrain: Temperate marsh and aquatic

Organization: Solitary or clutch (2–4)

Challenge Rating: 7

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: Greater drake 7–12 HD

(Large); grand drake 13–18 HD (Huge)

---

Legends and tales fascinate me, as the origins of such things often lead to distant truths. One tale I believe to have a core of truth is a legend told by the swampies that live in Widower's Wood near Corvis. They talk of a scaled serpent named Voozie. Normally I don't lend much credence to the tales of inbred swamp folk, but even I have to admit that something massive probably dwells in the swamps near Corvis. If Voozie does exist, my coin says she's a fog drake.

Fog drakes are bloated draconic creatures with speckled gray skin. Although they do have wings, they are too small and feeble to support flight. I hypothesize that they help in gliding through water, rather than the air. They tend to settle near wide rivers and large bodies of water and prefer to live out their several-century lifespans in one place when possible. The lair of a fog drake will usually be in a deep pond or swamp, as the beasts are amphibious and function as well in the water as they do on land.

From all indications, fog drakes tend to be about as intelligent as a dog or horse. They may resemble dracoliches, but they are not directly related and their actions are not tempered by intellect.

Despite this, gobber shamans seem to have a way of peacefully dealing with fog drakes. These alliances are akin to the relationship between druids and their animal allies, but slightly more tenuous. Fog drakes are not given to these alliances easily, and it has been a documented source of destruction for more than one gobber tribe that pushed its luck.

The fog drake gets its name from how it hunts its prey. The creatures can operate in thick fog, using it to their advantage when hunting. The eyes of a fog drake can see clearly through the thickest mist. If the fog is not thick enough, massive glands in its throat can produce a thick organic mist that the fog drake "huffs" out of its gills.

Combat

Fog drakes will use natural mist and their own exhalations to their tactical advantage. They can see through any type of fog as if it were clear air. They tend to hunt near their lairs if possible, since they are lazy and have some trouble traveling over land for long distances. It is actually relatively easy to approach one, but once one is engaged in combat, it is a fight to the death.

Amphibious (Ex): Fog drakes can breathe equally well in water or air.

Fog Breath (Su): Fog drakes can emit a cloud of fog from their gills. This cloud expands to 100 feet in radius. The fog it breathes lasts for 24 hours and takes about 30 seconds (5 rounds) to produce. It can be cast 3 times per day.

The effects of this fog are exactly the same as the effects of the calming mist spell.
Fog Drake

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the fog drake needs to hit with a claw attack. It then pulls its prey into its powerful jaws for a bite attack.

Bellow (Su): A fog drake can release a horrible roar. Anyone caught in the path of its roar (a 40-foot cone) must make a Reflex save (DC 17) or be knocked back 5 feet and take 1d6 points of damage.

Mist Sight (Su): The fog drake can see through any mist or fog (natural or magical) as if it were clear air.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: These huge beasts dwell in the swamps, lakes, and marshes of Cygnar. They are very territorial, and usually are big enough to eat a calf whole. They are slow and sluggish unless angered.

UNCOMMON: Fog drakes can huff mist through their gills and mouth. The sound this makes is very distinctive and is a good warning that you are being stalked by one of these beasts.

RARE: Drakes collect treasure, though it’s not clear why they do this. This treasure is usually deposited in hidden pits they use to secure their hoard.

OBSCURE: Fog drakes don’t like to hunt. If you can offer up a freshly killed beast, it is more likely to take the offering than to press an attack.

Treasure

The fog-producing glands of a fog drake can be sold to an alchemist for 150 gp a pair. If a character can brew potions, they can distill the gland’s juices to create fog bombs that are equivalent to the spell churning mist as if cast at 10th level.

Eating a preserved fog drake eye (preferably pickled) allows the eater to see through fog as if it were clear air for 1d6 hours. The eyes may be preserved by anyone with the Brew Potion feat, 5 XP, and 125 gp.

The massive beasts eat their kills and deposit the waste in a pond or pit a few hundred feet from the lair. Searching through this is a disgusting but rewarding task. Those searching the pit must make a Fortitude save (DC 12) or contract filth fever.

Searching will uncover standard treasure from the lair of regular and greater (7–12 HD) drakes and double standard treasure for grand (13–16 HD) drakes.

Hooks

A fishing community has recently had trouble with the local legendary lake monster. In reality, a gobber tribe has moved in nearby. The tribe has managed to place a fog drake living in the waters of the lake. It helps them destroy their opponents, and in return it gets to eat all the livestock it can find. Thinking the drake is responsible, the community elders have recruited the PCs to find the beast and put a stop to its rampage. The gobbers however are enterprising enough to use this to their advantage, and will stage one last raid on the town while the PCs attack the drake.
Galvanite Sentinel

Medium-size Aberration (Electricity, Incorporeal)

Hit Dice: 4d8 (18 hp + bonus hp; typically 60)

Initiative: +3 (+3 Dex)

Speed: Fly 40 ft. (good), 20 ft. (walking in armor)

AC: 19 (+3 Dex, +6 banded mail, by example)

Attacks: 2 electric bolts +6 ranged; or slam +3 melee

Damage: Electric bolt 1d8+5; or electric field 1d6+1; or slam 1d6+2

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Electrical shock

Special Qualities: Animate armor, hardness (usually 10), immunities, incorporeal

Saves: Fort +1, Ref +4, Will +4

Abilities: Str 15, Dex 17, Con —, Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 16

Skills: Listen +7, Move Silently +9, Spot +4

Feats: Point Blank Shot

Climate/Terrain: Ary

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: 6

Alignment: Always chaotic neutral

Advancement: 5–8 HD (Medium-size)

Most adventurers, soldiers, and scoundrels consider a suit of armor to be a good thing to have against your back, but I know of one case when it certainly is not. I once witnessed a bizarre spectral creature cackling with electrical energy that made a practice of animating suits of armor in order to stalk its prey. My encounter took place in a ruin not too far from Berks, but I’ve heard tales of these aberrations from various parts.

The creatures are relentless, although I do believe them to be somewhat intelligent. It’s hard to say just what the drives them, although I have heard word from an acquaintance of mine from the Fraternal Order of Wizardry that these beings subsist on the latent electrical energy of living creatures—an energy I’m not even sure exists, so I can’t refute such a theory, but surely it’s fascinating.

Combat

A galvanite sentinel is always found occupying a suit of metal armor, and that suit will almost always be a full suit, even if piecemeal. It attacks sluggishly, but steadily and doggedly, attacking creatures with its shocking abilities, feeding off its victim’s latent electrical energy as it does so. If facing a lone opponent, it will use its electrical bolt ability, but it will revert to its electrical field ability if facing multiple opponents.

It is intelligent enough to select weaker prey and to flee a losing battle, although it isn’t very capable of recognizing subtle threats or using much strategy.

Animate Armor (Su): The galvanite sentinel has the supernatural ability to animate and occupy a suit of metal armor as a full round action. It will not choose heavily damaged suits, and it always favors a full suit, picking up additional pieces if necessary. A suit affected by this ability receives no saving throw unless it is in another’s possession or is a magic item (save DC 15); it may not animate a worn suit. While occupying an animated suit the incorporeal creature itself may not be targeted except by attacks or abilities that specifically affect incorporeal creatures (thus everything affects the armor first). The galvanite sentinel gains bonus hit point equal to the Armor’s AC bonus times 10. It retains the armor’s hardness. The galvanite sentinel is never affected by the armor’s limitations, such as armor check penalty, reduced speed, etc. If it animates magical armor, then it may use the armor’s abilities normally (and it may now only be struck by weapons that match the armor’s bonus). It may not animate artifacts or intelligent magical items. When the armor’s hp is depleted the armor is destroyed, at which point the galvanite sentinel’s incorporeal self becomes vulnerable until it animates a new suit of armor.

Electrical Shock (Su): The galvanite sentinel may use this ability in one of two ways. The first is an electrical bolt with a range of 80 feet that does 1d8+5 damage, or it may create an electrical field in a 10-foot radius about it, which inflicts 1d6+1 damage to all in it. A bolt is considered a ranged touch attack. When the field is discharged, all in the affected radius may make a Reflex save (DC 15) for half damage; this is repeated at the beginning of each round if the field is maintained. Firing a bolt is a normal attack action; creating the field is a move-equivalent action, and it may be sustained indefinitely (movement cut to 5 feet for duration). It may never use both simultaneously. The galvanite sentinel always crackles with blue electrical energy; this may not be hidden nor diminished.

Immunities: When occupying an animated suit of armor the galvanite sentinel has all of the immunities of a construct, except immunity to mind influencing effects; however these are lost when the armor is destroyed. It is always immune to electrical attacks.

---

Treasure

Galvanite sentinels never collect treasure of their own; however sometimes they animate magical suits of armor that may be of value. Unfortunately, these are usually destroyed in subduing the creature, but it might also collect piecemeal pieces of smaller armor, such as rings and bracers, that may go undamaged.

---

Legends & Lore

Common: Galvanite sentinels are spectral creatures charged with electrical energy that animate suits of armor.

Uncommon: Most of the time these creatures seem to be found in ruins and other such locations, although sometimes they wander into civilized areas.

Rare: Galvanite sentinels feed off of latent energy found in living beings, and their appetite seems endless.

Obscure: These creatures have a knack for stealing magical suits of armor, and they get quite voracious when occupying one.

---

Hooks

Tales have arisen of a foul horned monster that is stalking the wilds of southern Cygnar, killing villagers and lone travelers. This is no monster, but in truth a galvanite sentinel that has animated a suit of magical dragon armor. It has gained full use of the armor’s abilities, and its high magical bonus means that most weapons can’t even harm it.
Gatorman

Large Monstrous Humanoid (Aquatic)

Hit Dice: 3d8+9 (22 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft., swim 20 ft.
AC: 14 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +4 natural)
Attacks: Bite +4 melee, 2 claws -1 melee, tail swipe -1 melee; or by weapon +4 melee Damage: Bite 1d8+2, claws 1d6+1, tail 1d4+1; or heavy mace 2d6+2 or greataxe 2d8+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Improved grab

Special Qualities: Darkvision 30 ft., hold breath, scent
Saves: Fort +6, Ref +4, Will +1
Abilities: Str 14, Dex 12, Con 16,
Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 10
Skills: Hide +6*, Move Silently +6,
Spot +6, Swim +18*
Feats: Improved Initiative

Climate/Terrain: Warm or temperate marsh
Organization: Pod (2–5), pod (5–20), tribe (20–80)
Challenge Rating: 2
Alignment: Usually neutral
Advancement: By character class

Not many people are aware of the secretive gatormen who occupy the dark, looming swamps of Cygnar. So elusive are these creatures that most believe them only to be a myth. A region like Cygnar sees its fair share of oversized gators from time to time (though you should see those that hide among the salty reeds of the Broken Coast — those are some beasts I tell you!), so it's no surprise that folks would assume a sighting of such a strange creature to be an exaggeration of the mundane. I, however, can tell you that they are no myth at all.

Perhaps one of the reasons they are so rare is because of their stealthy nature. Much like regular gators, gatormen prefer to lie silently in wait for their prey and I have found them to be crafty, tenacious, and — above and beyond all else — patient hunters. They have a penchant for laying traps, and this is how I encountered them. We had wandered up the Black River into their area and, given their territorial nature, an encounter was imminent. It was around a suspiciously shady bend that my guide's steamship became entangled in debris. And that's when they struck.

They herded us into their village, and I was able to learn a great deal very quickly. Their tribal society is stereotypical in many ways. They are presided over by a shaman (who typically keeps a few acolytes under his wing), and males and females adopt the usual tribal roles.

Childbearing is a bit more of a communal thing. Like most reptiles, gatormen (or I should say gatorwomen) lay eggs, and these are kept in a large incubation mound in the center of the village. The young are forced to grow up quickly, and half of the ranks of any hunting party are typically made up of juveniles (brash and eager to prove themselves; I'll note as well),

Despite their fierce nature, gatormen are not overly malicious creatures. They are far more intelligent than one might assume, and they can certainly be reasoned with. I must warn you of their incredible stubbornness, however. The shaman leading the pod that had captured my crew was a wise and crafty old lizard. He saw benefit in allowing us to bargain for our lives — and that benefit just so happened to be my enchanted Rhiathan master foreman's goggles. Acquiring that handy tool had been quite a task, but all told, I think I much prefer actually being a lead to wear google upon! In the end I'd have to say that my crew and I were quite lucky. Many gatormen tribes prefer to kill first and ask questions later and would just as soon have taken tribute as demanded it.

Combat

Full-grown gatormen are capable opponents, with claws, a powerful bite, and the ability to use tools. Small groups of gatormen will often sneak up on enemies by swimming underwater or leap up from a watery ambush. When a large-scale attack is needed, they are quite capable of forming well-organized combat units that are often supported by a druid shaman.

Gatormen will often try to latch onto smaller prey and drag them underwater to drown. They are less likely to do this when using weapons, but if they are fighting in or near water the chance increases greatly. They will also frequently attempt trip maneuvers with their tail attack.

Hold Breath (Ex): Gatormen can stay submerged for a number of minutes (not rounds) equal to their Constitution score. After this time they begin making Constitution checks as normal, but only once every minute.

Improved Grab (Ex): A gatorman may use this ability after a successful bite attack. Creatures held while submerged are subject to drowning.

Skills: Gatormen receive a +3 racial bonus to Swim checks. Additionally, they receive a +8 racial bonus to Hide checks when submerged.

Treasure

Because of their habit of demanding tribute gatormen might have a wide variety of valuables at any given time (considered double standard treasure). They favor weapons over any other item, though one will usually have to pry them from their cold dead claws to get them.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: A secretive race of walking intelligent gators is known to skulk about in some marshy areas, waylaying travelers.

UNCOMMON: Gatormen are a tribal race that keep to themselves, but are known to attack or trade with others on occasion.

RARE: Gatorman flesh tastes kind of like chicken.

OBSOLETE: These creatures are lead by shamans who claim to speak to the spirits of the swamp and who control all aspects of tribal life.

Hooks

- Kent Lawley is among those fortunate enough to have encountered a tribe of Black River gatormen and lived to tell about it. He accomplished this through no feat of strength or guile, but by giving up his family's most prized heirloom as tribute—a fantastic longsword called Saffrog. Lawley wants his family treasure back more than anything in the world, but unfortunately, the tribe's shaman, Arzhalne, has taken a shining to it. Lawley will pay quite a handsome sum to anyone who can return it to him.

- The Villiers foundry of Lesser Cygnar has been having a bit of a gator problem lately, as workers have been disappearing while on the job. The foundry's foreman hires the PCs to eliminate the problem, but the PCs soon encounter a gator shaman who explains that the foundry's runoff is poisoning their waters. The workers aren't too interested in fighting at first, and the gatormen will only give them one pass at a peaceful resolution. The PCs must think quickly to find a solution before the river runs red.
Gobbers

Small Humanoid (Gobber)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Attribute</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice:</td>
<td>1d8 (4 hp)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative:</td>
<td>+1 (+1 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed:</td>
<td>20 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC:</td>
<td>+12 (+1 size, +1 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks:</td>
<td>Gobber—dagger +1 melee; or dart +2 ranged</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage:</td>
<td>Gobber—dagger 1d4-1; or dart 1d4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach:</td>
<td>5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities:</td>
<td>Camouflage, low-light vision</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves:</td>
<td>Fort +0, Ref +1, Will +0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities:</td>
<td>Gobber—Str 9, Dex 13, Cha 10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skills:</td>
<td>Escape Artist +3, Hide +8, Move Silently +6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feats:</td>
<td>Weapon Focus (dagger)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Climate/Terrain: Gobber—Any plains, urban, or marsh
Bogrin—Any hill, mountains, forest, or desert

Organization:
- Family (8–20)
- Tribe (10–30)
- Clan (15–40)
- Great Clan (20–50)
- Krell (30–150)

Challenge Rating: ½

Alignment: Gobber—usually neutral
Bogrin—usually chaotic neutral

Advancement: By character class

---

In my grandfather’s day if you spotted a gobber near town, you’d put an arrow in its gut first and ask questions later. Prejudice still abounds, and even in places where a gobber wagon can sell its wares, people watch them warily and keep a hand on their pouches.

I have spent years studying this fascinating species and have found gobbers to be exceptionally adaptable. You can find them in virtually any climate and terrain. There are basically two distinct breeds of gobbers, with notably different physiological features. The first are the eleven common gobbers, while the second more warlike breed are the bogrin, sometimes called boggers.

All gobbers are hairless, with large feet and nimble hands.

They are small, ranging from three feet with the common gobbers up to almost four-feet-tall bogrin. Gobbers have smooth, greasy skin that has the unique property of changing colors like a chameleon. This works best if they are naked or wearing little clothing. Their natural skin tone is greenish gray. Most gobbers live shorter lives than humans, with the average gobber living into their sixth decade. It is a rare gobber that lives to see 80 years.

Gobbers speak a dialect of Molguur called Gobberish, a rapid-fire and arguably mangled version of the root language. It is more easily understood by ogre and trollkin who speak similar dialects, but it bears less resemblance to the human Molguur tongue. Most gobbers also speak the common human language of their region, usually Cynaran.

Local attitudes toward gobbers vary considerably. Near Gorvus, swamp gobbers, a variety of the common gobber, have an unwarranted reputation and are considered particularly primitive and treacherous. As in most places, these gobbers are more interested in making off with food and valuables than killing people. Areas inhabited by boggim have strong local prejudices against the entire species, and the kingdom of Llael has never accepted gobbers of any kind.

Yet gobbers are becoming increasingly widespread and accepted, and the most common variant carries on a nomadic tradition between human cities. Some dress in gray hooded ponchos treated via alchemy to change colors like their own skin. They travel in huge wagons, containing everything they own. These wagons are covered with hanging pots, tools, and other items for trade, clanging loudly enough to be heard from far away as they creep down the road.

These particularly sociable varieties of the common gobbim are sometimes called "scavenger gobbers" and have a reputation for picking among trash heaps and junk yards. Over a period of weeks I observed one group working in the Corsa scrap yards where they patched together a functional steam engine from rusty pieces of detritus. Gobbing on them later, I learned the engine was traded for a supply of brandy and wine, which was in turn traded for a collection of weapons, including crossbows and even several old pistols. Quite a profit given they started with trash; reminds me of the proclivities of certain junker relatives of mine.

There are more primitive gobbim varieties in several locations, including the aforementioned swamp gobbers common in the Widower's Wood. Even these gobbers establish tenuous contact with the nearest dominant species in order to barter with those who could use their wares. Nonviolent by nature, common gobbers are capable of defending themselves and sometimes misunderstand the violent way other races respond to their acts of theft.

Much of the traditional distrust of gobbers is due to the second breed, the boggim, or boggim. These are a distinctly different stock of gobbim, nearly a foot taller and weighing almost half again. They are strong physically and far more aggressive. Boggim can be recognized by the pronounced ridge of bone along their skull, starting at the bridge of the nose and ending at the back of their cranium. Boggim are just as adaptable as the common gobbers, although they prefer to settle in the wilds.
There are distinct varieties of boggin found in the mountains, forests, and desert wastes. They are particularly well entrenched in Cynara’s Wyrnwell Mountains as well as the northern mountains of Khabor and Khul.

Boggin conduct bloody ambushes against other races when they believe they can overwhelm them. They are usually cowardly and avoid a direct assault, stacking the odds in their favor with traps and their knowledge of local geography. The boggin are particularly fond of arson, setting habitations ablaze in the dead of night. However, while most are brutal and violent, there are some boggin who have become integrated into civilization and amended their ways. It is far less common to find this breed dwelling among humans compared to their more intelligent and peaceful goblin relatives.

All boggin have an intuitive knack for alchemy. Some scavenger boggin have been accepted into machine and alchemy shops in Pharin and Ceryl, where they have proven as capable as any humans working there. Skill at least with primitive alchemy is also prevalent with the boggin, which are noted for creating excellent flammable concoctions as well as some ingenious poisonous gases.

Don’t let a few positive experiences with civilized boggin blind you to their danger in the wilderness. The boggin can be vicious when their courage is up. I saw a tribe set an entire mining camp afire in the Candare Mountains, laughing while their victims screamed and burned. It was a chilling sight to behold.

Note on Lexicon: Some of my colleagues have criticized me for my preference for the colloquial term “gobber.” It is true that goblin is the proper name for these creatures, however gobber has become so universal in Cynaran and other tongues that I see no need to fight it. There are few outside the halls of academia who still refer to them as goblins, and all boggin I have spoken to prefer the less formal term as well.

Combat

Most boggin are cowardly in battle, but ambush travelers occasionally, especially in winter when food supplies have run low. Ambushes usually start with some sort of trap, followed by a barrage of darts or other ranged attacks before charging with melee weapons.

Gobbers rarely attack a group of more than ten opponents, unless they have overwhelming numbers. Their goal in most cases is to surprise the enemy and make off with food and other valuables; they will only fight to the death when they have no other choice.

Gobber Traits (Ex): All boggin benefit from a number of shared racial traits.

Low-light vision: Boggin can see twice as far as a human in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, or similar conditions.

+1 racial bonus to saving throws vs. poison.
Gobbers

+2 racial bonus on Alchemy checks. Gobbers have an innate curiosity and love of mixing substances and experimenting with their effects. They do not automatically have ranks in Alchemy without training, however.

+2 racial bonus to Escape Artist and Move Silently checks. Gobbers are taught from infancy the ways of stealth and wriggling loose from capture.

*Camouflage: Gobbers can blend into their surroundings by subtle changes in skin color. This grants a +4 circumstance bonus to Hide checks, adjusted down depending on how much skin is covered. (+4 for virtually nude, +3 for 25% covered, +2 for half covered, and +1 if 75% covered.)

Common Goblins ("Gobbers")

These are the most numerous, intelligent, and socially adept goblins. There are several variants of this breed, but all share the same physiology and base nature. They stand just over 3 feet tall, with green skin by default, although they sometimes use their camouflage ability to match their pigments to the skin of humans with whom they have regular contact.

Those who deal regularly with humans are easily spotted by their noisy trade wagons that serve as both a home and a source of livelihood. Nomadic gobbers travel in tribes of 10–30, composed of loosely related families under the leadership of a patriarch or matriarch.

Gobbers are most tame in Iab, where some people still attack goblins on sight. In the other kingdoms local laws sometimes protect them. Some tribes have formal treaties guaranteeing their right to travel the roads and sell their wares.

Most gobbers are nomadic, although families may settle down in human towns if they are able to find a niche for themselves, and some goblin villages have sprung up near human cities. There are particularly large goblin towns on the outskirts of Phar in Cygnar, Beric in Ord, and Khador in Khador. They enjoy locations noted for lively merchant trade and open markets.

The most notable primitive variant are the swamp gobbers, which are numerous in marshy terrain across the Iron Kingdoms. These elusive gobbers are wary of nearby humans.
Gobbers

and prone to ambushes and attacks, although primarily for the purpose of acquiring food or useful items. Swamp gobbers are less technically adept than their urban cousins, but have invented some tools to aid in ambushes, such as a device using bellows and an alchemical mixture to create fog-like smoke. Another primitive variant can be found in the plains of southern Khulun, adept at stalking the grasslands and bringing down large game by steering them into pit traps. These plains gobbers may be the ancestors of the modern urban variant.

Gobbers prefer daggers or short swords and craft excellent darts. Particularly well-equipped scavengers might have light crossbows or even a repaired old pistol. Gobbers sometimes wear armor, generally leather, studded leather, or homemade chain armor.

Bogrin ("Boggers")

This breed is noticeably larger and stronger than the standard goblin, with warriors standing almost four feet tall and considerably more muscular and stout. Bogrin have a distinct ridge at base the length of their skulls. Some boggers are fond of body markings such as tribal scars or tattoos, particularly if sharing territory with trolls. Although they are less sociable than common gobbers, boggers sometimes ally themselves with stronger races for purposes of survival. This is particularly common in the Schmidt Islands, as well as the Wyrnwall Mountains. There is a longstanding relationship between Demon-worshiping trollkin and bogrin and the two species generally get along. In the majority of these situations, the bogrin are subservient to the trollkin, but not always.

The most numerous are the mountain bogrin, noted for their large tribes (called "kriel") and extremely aggressive behavior. Mountain Boggrin are the least nomadic of all variants, settling into territories for long periods of time. They make their homes in cave networks and abandoned mines. They are excellent miners in their own right, and if they have access to ore will smelt their own iron and craft weapons and tools. Their weapons are generally of good quality. Bogrin can also be found in most major forests, in smaller tribes and living in permanent dwellings usually near a good source of prey. They have also adapted to life in the Bloodstone Marches, but these desert boggers are very elusive and avoid contact with other races entirely.

Boghrin are capable of sophisticated ambushes involving extensive use of traps and divination tactics, with fire as a favorite weapon. They use their intimate knowledge of the night well, and are adapted to the high mountains. They are particularly bloodthirsty and sometimes kill with little provocation.

Boggers wield daggers or halberds and also employ short bows. A favorite tactic is to attack from above by pouring a sticky flammable substance onto invaders, then firing flaming arrows into them (with a combined effect similar to alchemist's fire, PH). Some boghrin have rigged their villages with firetraps and are willing to destroy their homes to kill invaders. Forest boghrin are noted for mixing potent poisons and have developed a poisonous gas-blowing device similar to the fog-blower used by swamp boghrin. This device creates an effect nearly identical to the spell stinking cloud but with a +4 bonus to saving throws due to its non-magical nature. The desert boghrin of the Marches have invented a substance that can turn regular sand into quicksand, miring victims with the same effect as the spell entangle.

Bogrin Traits (Ex): These are in addition to the base goblin traits above except as noted.

- Immune to the dangers of natural extreme cold or heat. This makes them perfectly comfortable in any temperature from 0–110°F, suffering none of the regular exposure consequences.
- +2 racial bonus to Climb checks.
- Boghrin do not gain the +2 bonus to Escape Artist like regular boghrin.
- Boghrin have a -2 racial penalty to Bluff and Diplomacy skill checks.

Gobbler Characters

For information on boggers as player characters, consult the playable race appendix (pp. 236).

Treasure

Gobbers keep whatever they have managed to acquire by scavenging, raiding travelers, or trading. They prefer barter to currency. The homemade weapons of the civilized boggers are of surprisingly good quality, although often made of inferior substances like bone or an amalgam of lesser metals. Some boggers have special pouches that smell peculiar but allow full racial camouflage bonus as if they were naked. They are secretive about how these are made, but it is rumored the alephynes involve gobbler sweat and even urine. These articles do not function for non-gobbers, but can be patched together and are deceptive to enchantment.
Gobber villages are often amazingly intricate, such as this one near Merzdyn.

LEGENDS & LORE

COMMON: Gobbers make thievery a habit, but most aren't particularly violent.

UNCOMMON: Gobbers enjoy barter and will not ambush those who are willing to trade. These wily beings are far more dangerous and prone to attacking strangers without provocation.

RARE: Gobbers have a knack for alechemy and provide good fortune to wizards who take them in as assistants.

OBSOLETE: A knowledgeable wizard of 9th-level or higher can create an enchanted human-sized robe from three gobber pouches for 1,000 gp which provides a +4 circumstance bonus to Hide and Move Silently checks. This is commonly referred to as a robe of goblinkind.
Gorax

Large Giant

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hit Dice</th>
<th>3d8+6 (19 hp)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Initiative</td>
<td>+3 (-1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed</td>
<td>30 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC</td>
<td>13 (-1 size, -1 Dex, +5 natural)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks</td>
<td>2 claws +5 melee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage</td>
<td>Claw 1d6+4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach</td>
<td>5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities</td>
<td>Scent</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Saves: Fort +5, Ref +0, Will +1

Abilities: Str 18, Dex 8, Con 14, Int 5

Skills: Listen +2, Spot +2

Feats: Improved Initiative, Run

Climate/Terrain: Any land or underground

Organization: Solitary, pair, or pack (2–5)

Challenge Rating: 2

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: 4–6 HD (Large)

---

The gorax is a distant cousin to the ogres, though more animal in instinct and habit. In appearance they resemble some kind of cross between an ogre and a bear. These may be, in fact, the direct precursors to the ogres that are growing in number today, but unlike their brainier (albeit barely) cousins, the gorax is a breed on the decline. They have suffered in past decades from being hunted for their young. Up until recent years, beastmasters were paying good coin for gorax pups, since various armies were employing the beasts as forward shock troops. "Send in the goraxs!" was a cry often heard on battlefields. During these times, the beasts perished in the thousands. Those that survived the battle were often put down regardless. Once they had the taste of blood during the heat of battle, they were all the more difficult to control, and it was often more feasible to start training a new lot. However, the cost of feeding them and their feral natures made this a passing fad in time, and it is becoming more and more rare to see gorax in captivity anymore.

Still, they are hunted and captured in smaller numbers. A popular trend in the past fifty years throughout the larger cities—particularly in underground circles—is gorax pet fighting. I have witnessed such an event myself not so long ago, and to see money changing hands as these roving, slavering brutes tore each other apart for the entertainment of the masses produced a sinking feeling in my stomach. I don't know why, but it feels wrong. I feel a certain sense of pity for these beasts—perhaps it is because, in my opinion, they are so much more animal than monster. Just recently these battling creatures have become common fare in the Corvis Arena (I thought I saw some councilors and other notables frequenting the pit fighting dens!).

All in all, today these creatures are rarely captured (unless for the aforementioned pit fights). Instead, they are simply exterminated when they cross into human territory, which may be for the best since whenever this happens the results are generally ugly. Gorax are meat-eaters most definitely, and man can often be found near the top of the menu.

One last interesting fact for this entry; "like stink on a gorax" is a well-known phrase, but it may surprise anyone not in the know that the distinct smell of a gorax is not from its sweat—and whatever other odors it's been rolling in—but from its saliva. For men, saliva is merely a digestive aid—and sometimes a dis... giving muscle of indignation for those of lesser breeding—but for the gorax, saliva is a distinctive marker that is used for two primary reasons. One, in a pack environment, gorax spit on their food in order to claim it from other members of the pack. And the other reason is for attracting mates. During the mating season, the female gorax produces as much as seven times the amount of normal saliva, drooling constantly. Not a particularly endearing quality to us, to be sure, but it drives gorax males simply wild—or shall I say, wilder.

Treasure

There will always be at least 1d4 gems of varying worth and other shiny objects scattered about the gorax's filthy lair.

Hooks

- During a venture into the underground of a large city, the PCs somehow find some among them—or all of them—seized and tossed into a deep pit. A crowd gathers around, looking on and jeering, as a gate in the opposite wall rises up and a gorax (or two or three) comes rushing at them with bloodlust in its yellow eyes. Coins start getting tossed back and forth above.

The fight is on!

- A flustered farming community has had the ill pleasure of a pack of voracious gorax settling in the woods above their fields. The pack has already dragged off a few villagers, and the beasts are just too formidable for the farmers to fend off with their sundry assortment of picks and firebrands. They’ll scrap together what coin they can if the PCs would be so good enough as to rid them of this flesh-hungry nuisance.

---

It amazes me that these beasts were ever trained for war. I certainly not want one in my regiment! —N.P.
Gorgandur

Colossal Magical Beast

Hit Dice: 35d10+10 (542 hp)
Initiative: +8 (+4 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 20 ft., burrow 20 ft., swim 20 ft.
AC: 36 (–8 size, +4 Dex, +30 natural)
Attacks: Bite +42 melee, ram +40 melee, crush +40 melee, tail slap +40 melee, tail sweep +40 melee
Damage: Bite 4d8+15, ram 2d8+7, crush 4d8+22, tail slap 3d8+22, tail sweep 2d8+22
Face/Reach: 40 ft. by 80 ft./15 ft.
Special Attacks: Corrosive sludge, earthquake, improved grab, swallow whole
Special Qualities: Damage reduction 20/+3, stent, SR 25, frightful presence, tremorsense

Saves: Fort +33, Ref +23, Will +13
Abilities: Str 40, Dex 18, Con 30, Int 8, Wis 10, Cha 18
Skills: Climb +25, Listen +12, Search +12, Spot +16
Feats: Blind-fight, Combat Reflexes, Great Fortitude, Improved Critical (bite), Improved Initiative, Power Attack, Improved Bull Rush, Iron Will, Multiattack

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 25
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 36+ HD (Colossal)

There are some things in this world that you simply don’t tangle with. They tangle with you. And when they do you are at their complete mercy. The legendary Gorgandur is one such creature.

There are only four of these beings rumored to be in existence, and for that I am quite thankful. We’ve also seen a marked decrease in their activity over recent decades, which is something else to be thankful for.

Records of these beasts go back hundreds of years, and there are several legends that lay claim to them. The ancient Menites wrote of them in the Okeanizer, calling them the Gornahains; they were said to be a punishment left here on Gaen for us by Menoth. The legends that seem the most pervasive, however, are that these beasts are the offspring of the Devourer Worm and follow its example, spreading chaos and destruction wherever they may. From what I have heard from reports, these creatures do not go out of their way to seek out victims, but do not hesitate to obliterate those foolish enough to raise their ire.

If you’re breathing, then you’ve probably never witnessed a Gorgandur in person, though I have had the opportunity to speak to one or two rare survivors. They are colossal serpents that dwell deep in the earth (near subterranean warm pools in volcanic areas, I believe). Every few decades they wake from their slumber and unleash themselves upon the world to cause widespread destruction and eat the inhabitants and livestock of several towns while they’re at it. I’ve never heard of all of these beasts being slain, nor could I even imagine one.
Gorgandur

Combat

When a Gorgandur engages in combat it attempts to kill and then eat everything, and that’s generally what it does. It will attack first with a blast of corrosive sludge, then as it closes, it will set to smashing everything to pieces. Should some force manage to do critical damage to the Gorgandur, it would flee back from whence it came.

Corrosive Sludge (Su): A Gorgandur can spit forth a corrosive goop in a 100-foot cone. This does 4d4/2 damage to all in the area. Those affected may make a Reflex save (DC 31) for half damage. It may use this attack once every 1d6+1 rounds.

Attacks: The Gorgandur’s crush attack affects opponents of Large size or smaller, and it affects as many creatures as can fit under its body (see Face/Reach). Those creatures that fail a Reflex save (DC 31) are considered pinned; those that fail to escape take crushing damage each round. The Gorgandur’s tail sweep affects a 50-foot diameter half circle at the creature’s rear; creatures of Small size or smaller are not affected by it. Affected creatures may make a Reflex save (DC 31) for half damage.

Earthquake (Su): By slamming itself down upon the ground as hard as it can, a Gorgandur can cause an earthquake. This is in all ways like earthquake cast at 20th level, except that any fissures opened do not close, as the effects are permanent.

Frightful Presence (Ex): A Gorgandur produces a constant low rumbling that inspires terror in all creatures within 300 feet (dazed creatures are still affected). They must make a Will save (DC 31) or suffer the following: Creatures of 15 HD or less are shaken for 6d6 rounds; creatures of 10 HD or less are panicked for 6d6 rounds; creatures of 5 HD or less become frightened for 6d6 rounds. This is a fear effect.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this, a Gorgandur must make a successful bite attack.

Swallow Whole (Ex): With a successful grapple check, a Gorgandur can swallow any creature of Huge or smaller size that it has already grabbed. Once swallowed, creatures suffer 3d8+15 constriction damage per round as well as 2d6 acid damage per round. Swallowed creatures may attempt to break their way out by doing 50 points of damage to the gizzard (AC 20). Muscular action closes this hole up; additional victims must cut themselves free separately.

Because of its extremely large gullet, a Gorgandur can swallow two Gorgantuan, four Huge, eight Large, sixteen Medium-size, thirty-two Small, sixty-four Tiny, one hundred and twenty-eight Diminutive, and two hundred and fifty-six Fine opponents.

Tremorsense (Ex): A Gorgandur can sense the location of anything in contact with the ground within 300 feet.

Treasure

If you see a Gorgandur and you get away from it with your life, consider that treasure enough. There is, however, a strange tale of a survivor who claimed the fabled tooth of a Gorgandur. Several wealthy collectors offered him a king’s bounty for it, but the individual, a hunter by trade, kept the tooth as an eccentric artifact.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Ancient legends tell of colossal serpents that live in the earth, venturing forth rarely and with destructive consequences.

UNCOMMON: These beasts are called Gorgandur, and there are said to be four of them in existence. Legend also says that these beasts are nigh immortal, as no legend exists of one ever being slain or dying off.

RARE: The underground lairs of two of Gorgandur are known by a few gifted trackers—one is hidden beneath the Crystal Mountains, and the other within the Glass Peaks.

OBSCURE: It is true that the attacks of these serpents have all but ceased for the past several decades—40 years in fact. The reason is that all four of these creatures are spawning. Soon, each will release about a dozen young (approximately 10 HD) upon an unsuspecting world.

Hooks

A serpent-worshipping Devourer sect has located one of the Gorgandur’s lairs, and they have begun preparations to awaken the thing. The ghastly ritual requires the blood of several dozen virgin sacrificed as well as obliterating several forgotten ancient artifacts. It’s a fool’s errand, but this sect is powerful enough that it just might do it. The PCs are called in to stop them. The catch is that, should the sect awaken the beast, they’ll not only have it, but their clutch of about a dozen young2 rampaging about the countryside and eating everything in sight.
Gremlin

Tiny Fey (Grymkin)

Hit Dice: 1/2 d6 (1 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 20 ft.
AC: 14 (+2 size, +2 Dex)
Attacks: Small shortspear -2 melee; or bite -2 melee; or small shortspear +4 ranged Damage: Small shortspear 1d4+4; or bite 1d2-4
Face/Reach: 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft.
Special Attacks: Glitch
Special Qualities: Darkvision 90 ft., device merge, natural invisibility
Saves: Fort +0, Ref +4, Will +2

Abilities: Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10
Int 10, Wis 11, Cha 8

Skills: Balance +3, Climb +7, Craft (junk metal) +3, Disable Device +10, Hide +13, Jump +1, Listen +7, Move Silently
Open Lock +5, Spot +5

Feats: Alertness

Climate/Terrain: Urban
Organization: Gang (2–5), pack (6–20), or horde (21–50)
Challenge Rating: ½
Alignment: Always chaotic neutral
Advancement: 1–2 HD (Tiny)

Eviled by mechanics, engineers, and priests of Cyriss, gremlins are the bane of steamwork, clockwork, and other complicated metal devices. Not only are gremlins infamous for making constructs such as steamjacks malfunction, they are also noted for the often cruel mischief they visit upon others.

In my efforts to uncover more information about these ronally despised grymkin, I made provision to accompany Alias I Holm, one of Cyriss's six expert engrumilimators, on one of her routine visits to Engine's End.

Within the indusrious facility, I noted the presence of a number of domestic felines that I assumed were present to keep the number of rats down. Alias informed me that not only do they keep the rats under control, but they also serve the same purpose as regards gremlins. Cats hate gremlins and hunt them in preference to other prey. For their part, gremlins fear cats and will not attack one unless they outnumber it at least three to one. Should an establishment's cats exhibit unusual or start to disappear, it is usually a clear indicator that the gremlins are on the rise.

Alias presented me with the corpse of a recently killed gremlin for study. For the subject of such loathing, the gremlin presented a surprisingly comical appearance, with a disproportionately large round head balanced precariously atop a scrawny neck, a rotund potbelly, and short spindly limbs ending in oversized hands and feet. Its hairless pale gray skin was slightly metallic, its head dominated by a large needle-toothed mouth, two tiny silver eyes, a pair of extremely long pointed ears, and a complete lack of apparent nose.

Far from being defenseless, gremlins scavenge and utilize discarded scraps of metal to create various gadgets. They favor miniature spears for use as weapons, basic levers, and even crude lockpicks, bind springs to their feet to aid in jumping, and create grappling hooks, caltrops, and other sundry devices out of old wire, nails, and cogs.

Gremlins reproduce in bizarre manner, by physically merging with an appropriate and fully operational device, oftentimes ruining it in the process. At the end of a week thus merged, a new gremlin is born, and both parent and duplicate emerge from the device. Particularly large devices, such as those used in factories, may be plagued by a number of merged gremlins, leading to continual malfunction and eventual collapse. It is of no comfort to the engineer of the kingdom that gremlins do not merge with inert or broken down machinery, and the engineers' irritation is further aggra-
Gremlin

rated by the fact that merged Gremlins are best removed by a skilled (and expensive) exGremlinator utilizing the appropriate paraphernalia.

Combat

While not particularly violent, gremlins do enjoy tormenting other beings by making devices malfunction at inopportune moments, sneaking up, and prodding them with spears before fleeing, leaving cartwheels on seats, and so on. When faced with any serious threat, they prefer to flee.

Glitch (Su): A gremlin may cause a brief malfunction in a single complex device such as a steampress or crossbow. Simple items like swords cannot be affected.
Nonmagical, unattended items automatically malfunction, while magical or attended items must make a Fortitude save (DC 10) to avoid malfunction. If the check succeeds, that device cannot be affected by any gremlin's Glitch power for a day. Once a gremlin uses Glitch, it cannot use it again for 1d4 hours.

Device Merge (Su):
Once per month, a gremlin
may physically merge with a mechanical device. A magical or attended device may make a Fortitude save (DC 10) to resist the merge. Once merged, the gremlin can use its glitch power on the device at will, and also absorbs some of the elements of the device, compromising its integrity; the device's hardness is reduced by 1 per week, and its hit points are reduced by 1 per day. This is a gremlin's means of procreation.

Natural Invisibility (Su): A gremlin may become invisible as a standard action, although it does not remain invisible if it attacks. A gremlin's invisibility does not affect cats.

Skills: Gremlins get their +4 Dexterity modifier for Climb checks. They have a +2 racial bonus to Climb, Jump, and Listen checks, and a +1 racial bonus to Disable Device checks.

Treasure

Gremlins are not known to acquire and hoard material possessions, beyond those worthless items they craft out of scraps of metal, discard ed nails, and other industrial detritus.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Cats and gremlins loathe each other, and cats can even see invisible gremlins.

UNCOMMON:
Gremlins are nocturnal; they can operate during the daylight hours, but find it uncomfortable.

RARE: Arcane spellcasters have been known to acquire gremlin familiars. If such an individual .calls for a familiar in an appropriate location, and is of at least 5th-level, a gremlin may answer the call at the DM's discretion.

OBSCUR: Cyress bears a particular hatred for the monkey wrenching grymkin and grants her clerics the ability to turn unmerged gremlins, as other clerics turn undead.

Hooks

Rumors abound that rival engineers and factories sometimes attempt to sabotage each other's work by introducing gremlins onto the premises. The characters could be employed to covertly drop one or two gremlins into a factory, or prevent such sabotage.
Gristle & Flay

Gristle
Medium-size Fey (Grymkin)

Hit Dice: 1d6+4 (21) (45 hp)
Initiative: +0
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 14 (+4 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +7 melee, bite +2 melee
Damage: Slam 1d6+4, bite 1d8+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.
Special Attacks: Fear aura, improved grab, swallow whole
Special Qualities: Darkvision 90 ft., regeneration 5, scent, SR 17
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +5, Will +6
Abilities: Str 19, Dex 11, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 13, Cha 12
Skills: Climb +9, Disguise +6, Hide +7, Intimidate +10, Jump +9, Listen +8, Move Silently +7, Spot +8
Feats: Alertness, Dodge, Power Attack

Climate/Terrain: Any non-aquatic Organization: Unique pair (always appears with Flay)
Challenge Rating: 6
Alignment: Always chaotic evil
Advancement:

Flay
Medium-size Fey (Grymkin)

Hit Dice: 6d6+12 (33 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 14 (+2 Dex, +2 natural)
Attacks: Bite +6 melee
Damage: Bite special
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.
Special Attacks: Constrict 1d6+2, fear aura, improved grab, puppeteer
Special Qualities: Darkvision 90 ft., regeneration 5, SR 17
Saves: Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +8
Abilities: Str 15, Dex 13, Con 14, Int 14, Wis 13, Cha 12
Skills: Balance +9, Climb +6, Disguise +5, Hide +8, Intimidate +6, Jump +9, Listen +5, Move Silently +9, Spot +6, Tumble +9
Feats: Dodge, Iron Will, Mobility, Weapon Focus (bite)

Climate/Terrain: Any non-aquatic
Organization: Unique pair (always appears with Gristle)
Challenge Rating: 6
Alignment: Always chaotic evil
Advancement:

Present is the kingdom's most famed chattering tales of the doings of wicked grymkin. Although the jaded and more sophisticated among us may scoff at many such tales as the terrors of superstition, my investigations and studies have shown that even the most outrageous stories often contain a kernel of truth—or in a rare few cases a terrifyingly accurate portrayal. Such tales, spun around campfires and hearths to scare both children and adults, often recount the foul depredations of a pair of grymkin known only as Gristle and Flay. I have found these tales to be but shallow representations of the true horrors of these legendary fiends.

I have recorded tales that place these monsters in locations as diverse as the mountain footpaths of Rhul, crossroads in the Protectorate of Menoth, and even shadowed byways in the bowels of the Corvis Undercity. It seems the wretched pair know no boundaries, though why they range so far remains a mystery. Similarly, their aims remain unknown, beyond the obviounly relish with which they inflict pain and suffering upon those unfortunate enough to attract their attentions.

It was upon my return journey to Corvis, following my successful expedition to uncover more knowledge on the bridge trolls of Merywyn that I discovered the tales of Gristle and Flay to be all too much a reality.

A mere three days' ride outside Corvis, the merchant's caravan with which I was traveling was set to camp down for the night, as dusk was gathering. Guards were set, a campfire started, and I made ready to settle for the evening. It was then that Jutif Yafe, our merchant host, spotted a hulking cloaked figure, deep within the shadows at the edge of the campfire's light. The alarm was quickly raised, and a challenge issued; the figure merely stalked forward into view, seemingly unconcerned. What I saw then made my stomach knott and my blood turn to ice.

The cloak was thrown off to reveal a nightmare creature, a naked, inhumanly muscular and hairless man, his face a grotesque mask of insane amusement, his mouth far too broad, full of far too many teeth. His skin was crawling with disturbing tattoos that writhed and twisted, and as we watched in stunned horror, his skin peeled away from his body wetly, to stand on its own, hollow and smiling. The camp immediately became a confusion of screaming panic, as guards and travelers alike fled in blind terror. The guard next to me became hyster-cal, and it was all I could do to prevent him from running and hopefully defend him from Gristle and Flay, should they choose to attack. As I watched helplessly, the grymkin began to hunt my fellow travelers.

Flay moved with the horrifyingly swift and jerky motions of a marionette, leaping upon a guard and "swallowing" her, his skin fitting over her brain wracked body like a glove. The ghastly realization that she was still entirely aware occurred to me when I looked into her horrified eyes. Sickeningly, as Flay began to move, he began to make her move in step with him. Gristle clutched a struggling merchant in his skinless fists, his twisted grin growing broader as Flay crepted closer, still fitted like a sheath around the female guard. Flay reached down with the Gristle & Flay

Gristle's hand and retrieved a dagger dropped in the panic, and then began to slowly cut up the merchant bound in Gristle's iron grasp. The guard, aware of the horror she was inflicting from within Flay, waited patiently, her cries drowned out only by the agonized screams of the merchant. When the merchant was close to death, Gristle's broad mouth opened impressively wide, swallowing the mewing unfortunates, the fiend's stomach stretching to accommodate a meal little smaller than its devourer. The merchant's weak twitching form could be seen in horrifying silhouette through the skinless flesh of Gristle's stomach. Flay began to constrict around the form of his unwilling "puppet," crushing flesh and bone until the female guard's whimpers ceased. With a lurch, he then peeled free from her ruined form, and the horrific pair danced gleefully back into the darkness beyond the camp.

My travels have brought me into contact with many beasts and entities, both fair and foul, but few encounters have etched themselves into my mind with such brutal clarity.

Rich and poor, young and old, those alone and those in numbers, have all been the victims of Gristle's and Flay's nightmarish attacks, the only common link being that of one or more survivors left to tell the tale.

Combat

Gristle and Flay can be cunning or bold, depending on their capricious whims. They have been known to appear suddenly and dramatically, ambush or stalk victims patiently, and even disguise themselves to move amid the unsuspecting. Flay covering Gristle, the two concealed beneath cloak or robe and cowl or hat.

As soon as they attack, they incapacitate those weak of will with their horrific countenances, rendering their unfortunate prey more easily dealt with. The duo prefers to toy with their victims, wringing every ounce of terror, pain, and misery they are capable of—seldom is anyone killed outright.

Due to the corpse-like appearance of the pair, it is not unknown for clerics to mistakenly attempt to try and turn them, a mistake that often proves to be the unfortunate cleric's last.

Gristle

Gristle is the more brutish of the two grymkin and has been known to pummel and bite victims into submission before swallowing them whole, tearing them or grabbing and presenting them to Flay for a period of shared torment.

Fear Aura (Su): Gristle emits an aura of chilling fear with a 60-foot radius. Any creatures with less than 5 HD that look at Gristle must make a successful Will save (DC 14) or suffer the effects of fear for 10 rounds.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, Gristle must hit with a slam attack.

Swallow Whole (Ex): With a successful grapple check, Gristle is capable of comfortably swallowing opponents of up to Medium-size or smaller that he has grabbed. Once swallowed, the creature suffers 1d6+2 points of crushing damage per round, as well as 5 points of acid damage from digestive acids. Provided it has the means, the creature may cut its way out by doing 10 points of damage to the gizard (AC 12). The hole is closed up after the creature exits; any other swallowed victims must cut their own way out. Gristle may swallow one Medium-size, two Small, four Tiny, eight Diminutive, or sixteen Fine or smaller opponents.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and holy or blessed weapons and water deal normal damage to Gristle. He can regrow a lost limb or body part in 3d6 minutes, or he can reattach a severed limb instantly.

Flay

Flay displays far more creativity and finesse in his application of fear and suffering than does Gristle. His decisions usually lead the pair.

His favored attack is to swallow and engulf a victim (a bite attack using improved grab), fitting tightly around them like a second skin, controlling all their actions (using puppeteer), forcing them to perform terrible deeds while they remain completely aware of everything they are forced to do while within him. His fun over, he then constricts around his victims, crushing them to death. He will not engulf victims in spiked armor, lest he damage himself.

Constrict (Ex): Flay may constrict an opponent that has been successfully grabbed with a successful grapple check, dealing 1d6+2 damage.

Fear Aura (Su): Flay emanates an aura of chilling fear with a 60-foot radius. Any creatures with less than 5 HD that look at Flay must make a successful Will save (DC 14) or suffer the effects of fear for 10 rounds.

Improved Grab (Ex): After a successful bite attack, Flay may engulf any Medium-size or smaller humanoid opponent.

Puppeteer (Su): Any victim successfully ensnared by Flay with improved grab must make a Will save (DC 15) or be subject to the effects of dominate person. The effects last as long as Flay remains wrapped around the victim.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and holy or blessed weapons and water deal normal damage to Flay. He can regrow a lost limb or body part in 3d6 minutes, or he can reattach a severed limb instantly.
Treasure

Gristle and Flay have never shown any interest in acquiring or carrying possessions of any kind, beyond any garb they temporarily disguise themselves with.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Gristle and Flay are two legendary grymkin, Gristle being skinless, Flay being Gristle's tattooed and independent skin. Tales of the luridous depredations of the two are common in all lands. Gristle and Flay only ever attack at night, and vanish at the break of dawn.

UNCOMMON: Anything encircled by an unbroken ring of holy water is safe from their attacks. Similarly, Gristle and Flay cannot enter hallowed ground.

RARE: Gristle and Flay can be destroyed by fire and weapons and water blessed and made holy, but they always reform a year and a day after being destroyed, in some remote, seemingly random locale.

OBSCURE: Legends have it that Gristle and Flay are but two of three grymkin brothers, the other being Spinal, a skeleton-like grymkin. How Spinal came to be banished or separated from Gristle and Flay is lost to the mists of time, but rumors have it that the pair still seek their absent brother.

Hooks

Recently, rumors abound that Gristle and Flay have been sighted in the labyrinthine depths of the Corvis undercity, but as of yet, the grymkin have not attacked anyone. What might they be doing or looking for, and why have they not attacked?
Guardian Giant

Huge Giant
Hit Dice: 20d8 + 140 (230 hp)
Initiative: +6 (+2 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 50 ft.
AC: 24 (-2 size, +7 natural, +9 half-plate)
Attacks: +4 Gargantuan greatsword
Damage: +4 Gargantuan greatsword

Saves: Fort +19, Ref +8, Will +14
Abilities: Str 39, Dex 15, Con 24,
Int 17, Wis 22, Cha 16
Skills: Diplomacy +8, Intimiate +8,
Listen +12*, Spot +23*, Sense Motive +22*

Feats: Alertness, Combat Reflexes,
Improved Initiative, Iron Will,
Weapon Focus (Gargantuan greatsword)

Climate/Terrain: Special
Organization: Unique
Challenge Rating: 20
Alignment: Lawful neutral

Advancement: 21+ (Huge)

I came across this creature but once, many years ago while prospecting high in the mountains of Rhal. A fearsome being it was, 20 feet tall and as broad as a tavern, with great three-fingered fists clutching a greatsword taller than a cypress tree. Most striking of all was its head, completely ringed with six dark eyes. Upon its palms there were also—amazingly—eyes. Quite passively it regarded me as I approached, weapons sheathed and hands held up in a gesture of peace.

Behind the giant, carved into the side of the mountain were two enormous doors of stone, overgrown with moss and covered with fine writing in a tongue I did not recognize.

To my surprise, he greeted me in the common speech of Cynara. The giant sat upon a low block of stone before the mysterious portal, and we conversed for some time.

"How long I have been here, I do not know," it told me. "But I have seen the seasons change countless times. I am the keeper and the way, the watcher and the warden. Do you carry the mark that will free me of my long vigil?"
I assured him I did not.

"Ah, then that is sad," said the giant, bowing his great head. "But it is pleasing to me!" I was glad to have company. What faces are abroad in the world?

I expounded upon the kingdoms in great detail, until long after the sun had set. Late in the evening, curiosity overcame me. I ventured to inquire about the nature of the secret behind the doors.

"It is a power and a possession far beyond your ken, small mortal," the giant answered. "My master named me Gorgolorbaramantur. He who bears the gates of reason. None shall pass who bear not the mark!"
That night I slept under the watchful gaze of the unblinking giant, and when I awoke, I left him to his long vigil, promising to return one day.

I have pondered long and hard about my encounter with the giant, considering topics after time with no mention of the Guardian Giant

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: There's a giant in the mountains of Rhul guarding an ancient treasure.
RARE: The giant guards a door that has long shut away a great evil.
OBSCURE: There are a handful of Guardian Giants, each tasked with securing an item or being of unimaginable power and pure evil. Any giant failing would be dire, but if all were to fail it is said that a force more sinister than even the Dragon King would arise.

Combat

The guardian giant wields a +4 Gargantuan greatsword. He prefers to disarm, subdue, or incapacitate attackers. He will fight to the death if he is unable to prevent intruders from entering the portal by peaceful means.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—alarm, comprehend languages, detect LO, disguise appearance, detect thoughts, dimension door, dispel magic, true seeing, invisibility, mass charm. These abilities are as the spells cast by a 20th-level sorcerer (save DC 13 + spell level).

Hypnotic Stare (Sp): The giant can hypnotize targets with a will save to resist. A target who fails is dominated and cannot resist. Any creature hypnotized in this way cannot resist against any will save. A target who succeeds may still resist another hypnotic stare.

All-around Vision (Ex): The giant can see any environment 1/8 mile away. Its vision is not affected by darkness.

Treasure

Gorgoldobaramountatt wielded Mikshashivash, Terror of the Trolls, a +4 Gargantuan greatsword, which would be valued at 45,000 gp.

Hooks

• What lies behind the door in the mountains? A wealthy scholar wants to know and will pay anything to find out if the rumors of a massive treasure hoard are true. A share of the loot will go to the party if they are successful and speak of the mission to no one.

• The Dwarves of Rhul have long known of the giant's presence. They've heard of an expedition to open the door—and would like to prevent it. Whoever's behind that door should stay there if a beast of such power is its guardian. The party must stop this investigation, but the dwarves fear it may be too late...

"I am a warning and a warning. We beseech those who seek to destroy me and enter this unknown place." — The giant, Gorgoldobaramountatt
Hollowed

Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 4d12 (26 hp)
Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 14 (+1 Dex, +3 natural)
Attacks: Slam +5 melee
Damage: Slam 1d6+3 and energy drain
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Energy drain, consume organs
Special Qualities: Undead, reawaken
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +6

Abilities:
Str 16, Dex 12, Con —
Int 7, Wis 14, Cha 16

Skills:
Hide +8, Move Silently +8,
Listen +8, Spot +9

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 6
Alignment: Always chaotic evil
Advancement: 5–8 HD (Medium-size)

In the realm of Ord, in a dark, rough wood not too far from the city of Five Fingers, I once encountered a cult of worshipers known as the Cult of the Despoilers. They are believed to be a hereditary branch of the questionably Cult of the Devourer Worm, though my studies have uncovered hints that it may in fact be a Despoiler cult corrupted by Thanar's agents—those who would explain their passion for and powers of undeath, something usually absent from most Devourer enclaves. This cult was responsible for many depredations, but one that is still lurking about today is a breed of restless dead known as the hollowed.

These unfortunate were victims captured by the cult and tortured in a slow death. All of their internal organs were removed and consumed in a ghastly ritual to the Devourer. The victim, however, was never spared the agony of his pain through death. Instead, the victim would rise several days later and begin a horrid existence of undeath in which its only purpose and desire were to consume the whole organs of living beings so that it might regain life.

When one encounters a hollowed, they will come face to face with a shambling corpse, usually with fresh organs dripping from various holes in its cadaver. Don't be fooled, however, as these creatures are quite powerful for all of their decayed appearance, and their touch alone can suck the life right out of a man, so as to preserve the internal organs intact. They favor stalking their opponents or using guile where possible. They can be quite tricky, however, as an experienced traveler will know that each hollowed tends to stick to a single strategy. Of course, once you find out what it is, it may be too late.

Aside from the obvious terror of such a creature, there are two things that make them most horrible. The first is that ancient rumors hold that if a hollowed actually completes its entire set of organs in "one moon," it will come back to life. Secondly, it is said by the cult that these reawakened creatures are faithfuls of the Devourer and carry out the practice of its cult in true form—stalking their former friends and loved ones for consumption and posing as living members of society. I've never seen this tested, but I can only fathom the terror of such a creature returned to living existence.

The second terrifying fact is that these creatures have been encountered in all corners of the Iron Kingdoms—which doesn't really say so much about the terror of the hollowed as it does about just how widespread the activities of the Cult of the Despoilers had been. Of course, no one really knows for sure what exactly happened to the cult. All we see today are their horrid, walking dead creations. But that doesn't mean they're not out there somewhere...

Combat

Hollowed have been known to use various techniques in stalking their prey, most of them devious. Some will lie still and motionless along the side of the road until someone comes to inspect them, while others will shamble about concealed under a cloak until it gets close enough to attack a victim. Whatever strategy it uses, it will only use one and this attack mode usually means some sort of echo of the creature's former existence. In any case, when a hollowed enganges a creature in combat, it fights to the bitter end, focusing entirely on its initial target. It will focus on using its level drain, so as to preserve the internal organs.
Energy Drain (Su): The strike of a hollowed deals one negative level. This may be removed by a Fortitude save (DC 15).

Consume Organs (Su): Once a victim is killed, the hollowed will rip open the chest cavity and begin consuming organs whole. The creature’s jaw unhangs like a snake’s and stretches to accommodate all organs. The order of consumption does not matter; all organs rearrange themselves in the hollowed’s body of their own accord. The creature will consume all major organs found in the torso as well as the brain (but not the spinal cord). It will only consume organs of a creature of its own race (usually human), and it will only consume intact organs.

Reawaken (Su): If the hollowed is able to consume all major organs within 24 hours, it undergoes a transformation back to its life. Note that all organs consumed must be intact.
and multiple kills may be necessary. Upon completion the hollowed’s body transforms, the chest and stomach cavities closing up and pale fleshy skin enveloping the body.

The creature then becomes an intelligent undead that is a direct incarnation of its living self. Its Intelligence rises to its previous level minus 3 (or +5 to the existing Intelligence if its previous intelligence is unknown), and the creature regains the use of all skills (at half their value) and feats it knew (or +20 skill points and +3 feats, if previous unknown). Its memory returns, largely intact, however it regains none of its previous emotional self (and can’t remember anything about it); thus no alignment change (it stays chaotic evil). The creature then lives only to torture those it knew in life and consume the flesh of its own kind. Extraordinary and supernatural class abilities (including spell-casting) are not returned. It never reverts to its earlier hollowed form; however it is destroyed in combat, its remnants burst forth upon the ground in a gooey, black mess.

Most make an attempt to return to their previous life if possible, where they will pose as living creatures, hidden in society. If their death was widely known or witnessed, it will either stalk its former family and acquaintances from the shadows or move on to set up shop elsewhere. Regardless of how, though, absolutely all will return to stalk society in some way. Virtually all reawakened of the Wurm gain levels as clerics in the worship of the Devourer (though, they in truth draw their energies from Thiar). They have access to the Chaos and Destruction domains.

Treasure

Hollowed do not actively seek new valuables, although they may possess any number or type of items from their previous existence. They are sometimes found to possess cult artifacts such as hunger stones or manuals of damnable corpulence.

Hunger Stone: These are small stones usually hung from a chain about the neck that have small gaping mouths sculpted all about them, and which bear a tainted holy symbol of the Devourer Wurm. Anyone who dons one of these items or has it placed on their person must immediately make a Will save (DC 19) or be overcome with insatiable hunger, eating until they vomit, then eating some more for days on end. This aspect of the stone is an Enchantment (compulsion) effect; creatures immune to such effects are not affected by it.

However, all creatures that wear the item are subject to its nauseating effect; each victim suffers permanent ability loss of one Con per day (save DC 19 to resist each day) as the stone sucks their life essence away. The Enchantment aspect of the stone convinces them that this wasting away is a result of eating, and they will be unwilling to remove the item; those who are immune to the Enchantment aspect or who can simply remove the stone (if possible.) The bodies of those who die of this effect crumble to ash within 1d4 hours of death.

Manual of Damnable Corpulence: These mysterious tomes are said to contain the secrets of creating a hollowed, as well as even stranger creatures. It preaches at great length on the hunger of the Wurm, and it contains the formulae for many of the cult's rituals and even the secrets to invoking some of the Devourer's own magic. They are exceedingly rare and usually only in the possession of a Spoliate (high priest, 12th-level or higher).

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The hollowed are risen dead, created by a chaotic and ancient cult.

UNCOMMON: They are progeny of the Cult of the Despoilers, which is rumored to still be active even today.

RARE: Once a hollowed completes its set of organs, it undergoes a transformation into a more advanced and insidious form of creature.

OBSCURE: The cult believes that the hollowed are the physical connections of the Devourer to Caen and that all of their grizzly meals are not filling their own bellies, but rather its. In truth, their destructive undead energies are being harnessed by Thamar, though to what end is anyone's guess.

The Cult

The Cults of the Devourer Wurm are as mysterious and varied as they come, but this in turn reflects the nature of the Wurm itself. It is a being of nature and chaos that few understand, but which some do worship and others draw power from. The hollowed is the product of just one aspect of the cult (one that emphasizes the all-consuming/anti-civilization aspect), although Thamar's corruption is what truly makes beings such as the hollowed possible.

Hooks

Seeds of the Despoilers' cult can be found in all parts of the realms, although they seem to be more common in Khador. When discovered, local officials always seek to have them wiped out, usually hiring adventurers for the job. Unfortunately, many of these adventurers are never seen again... at least not as they were known in life.

The influence of the Despoiler's creation is widespread.Indeed, just recently a rash of incidents in the Redhook District of Gorris have been reported. The details tell of harlots and homeless torn physically apart, associated with tooth marks on their torsos and their organs often missing. To date, the Watch has turned up nothing at all, save for reports of a mysterious cloaked figure often seen in the area, shambling along the Wayside. I daresay this cries of the more grander of the hollowed. I have sent a packet to the Watch command with my findings on these abominations in the hopes of aiding them stop these killings. Of course, I also urged that if they did turn up such a creature, I should be most interested in making the journey to offer my professional examination. One can only pray to Morvid that the horrible killings are halted, and if it is indeed a creation of the Despoilers, it be put to rest.
Hull Grinder

Huge Beast (Aquatic)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hit Dice:</th>
<th>12d10+36 (102 hp)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Initiative:</td>
<td>+3 (+3 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed:</td>
<td>Swim 40 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC:</td>
<td>20 (-2 size, +3 Dex, +9 natural)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks:</td>
<td>Ram +14 melee, or 2 Bite +14 melee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage:</td>
<td>Ram 2d8+7, or bite 2d8+7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach:</td>
<td>10 ft. by 20 ft./10 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks:</td>
<td>Charge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities:</td>
<td>Scent (aquatic), blindsight, improved hearing</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Saves:

- Fort +11, Ref +11, Will +4

Abilities:

- Str 25, Dex 16, Con 16
- Int 5, Wis 10, Cha 9

Skills:

- Hide +4*, Move Silently +7
- Listen +15, Intuit Direction +2

Climate/Terrain:

- Temperate and warm aquatic

Organization:

- Solitary

Challenge Rating:

- 8

Alignment:

- Always neutral

Advancement:

- 12-24 HD (Huge); 24-32 HD (Gargantuan)

Combat

When attacking, the hull grinder will wait on the bed of the river, kicking up mud if necessary for concealment, until the vessel or creature passes overhead. It will then strike swiftly with its spines or jaws. When attacking ships, it focuses solely on capturing the hull of the ship from beneath, ignoring other threats until they become immediate. While directly beneath the ship, it is quite difficult to target from on deck. A successful ram attack by the hull grinder (charge maneuver) initiated from more than 30 ft. increases the critical hit to 17-20/x3 for that attack alone.

Blindsight (Ex): The hull grinder can function at full capacity in complete darkness through hearing, smell, and sensitivity to vibrations in water.

Improved Hearing (Ex): When submerged, the hull grinder can hear sounds at incredible distances, as far as 2 miles in flowing water or 8 miles in still water. Because of this sensitivity, all sound-based attacks deal double damage (a save for half, if allowed, does only half damage) and force an immediate retreat from the creature. A hull grinder never retreats, however, from its fair and will defend it to the death. They receive a +6 racial bonus to Listen checks.

---

*I've spent many a journey traveling down the rivers of the Iron Kingdoms, and I've seen many things that would send the weak of heart scurrying to land. The most startling and perhaps most dangerous of such creatures I encountered while sailing the Dragon's Tongue aboard the steamship Palaxis, captained by the great Khadoran Halford Bray. His ship was torn asunder from below by a dreaded hull grinder. I was whisked ashore by a freak current, but the captain made a stand with his ship that would have made even the legendary Diogenes Captains of Oed give a stout salute.

Although I believe it to truly be an abnormal fish, the beastly hull grinder sports quite a demonic visage. A massive 15 feet is typical of its length, although the more wizened captains whisper of beasts as long as 30 feet. The hull grinder has jagged hooks and burs all along its body, and massive jaws which are outwards, an unusual growth even in a species such as this, making them ideal for ripping apart large objects.

Above all else, the hull grinder hates being disturbed, especially by noise. Steamboats traveling a quiet river are at the absolute most risk, although the hull grinder has been known to attack other, seemingly silent, vessels. Creatures screaming and splashing about in the water are also likewise in grave danger.*
Hull Grinder

Skills: Hull grinders gain a +8 racial bonus to Hide checks in muddy or dark water.

Treasure
The long barbs of the hull grinder are prized by sailors for their durability, lightness, and the fact that they float if cast with a wooden handle. These items have a hardness of 8 with 20 hp per inch of thickness. Blades crafted of them gain a +2 enhancement bonus to strike (but not damage) due to their light weight and good balance. Similarly, items constructed of them gain a +2 enhancement bonus to skill checks where applicable. Raw unworked barbs typically sell for 10–20 gp.

Hull grinders keep no treasure, though sunken ships litter the riverbeds near their lairs and may contain anything imaginable.

RARE: They are sensitive to sound and can be scared off easily by loud noises or avoided by "silent drifting" past known lairs.

OBSCURE: A hull grinder will remember the "voice" of an engine that scared it off before and will avoid it unless provoked.

Hooks
- Legends speak of a hull grinder mating pool far up the waters of the Black River. Clearly no sane captain would ever venture there, however this is just what the ill-fated Captain Elarus Monstroone did with the legendary Berklaire family treasury aboard when fleeing fearless pirates. Were anyone to ever brave those dangerous waters, they just might discover how much the old Berklaire of Corvis (since fallen into ruin) was worth.

- Legends also speak of a dread captain who piloted his ghostly ship up and down the waters of the Dragon's Tongue at night, searching in death for something that he could never find in life. None know just what the item is, but rumors persist that it lies in the belly of a hull grinder as old as the Dragon's Tongue itself.

Legends & Lore
COMMON: Hull grinders hide in muddy or dark water and always attack by surprise.

UNCOMMON: They are very territorial, each defending a regular area surrounding its lair.
Husk

Medium-size Vermin

Hit Dice: 8d8+8 (44 hp)
Initiative: +0
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 18 (+8 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +6 melee
Damage: Slam 1d3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Swarm
Special Qualities: Vermin, hive intelligence, fire vulnerability

Saves: Fort +7, Ref +2, Will +2
Abilities: Str 10, Dex 10, Con 12,
Int —, Wis 10, Cha 6
Skills: Hide +3, Listen +3, Move Silently +3, Spot +3
Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 4
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 9-11 HD (Medium-size)

I encountered this abomination years ago on the road to Fellig. My companions and I had made camp for the night under the shelter of a small copse of trees. I had just spent a few hours writing in my journal and was drifting off to sleep when an alarm rang out throughout the camp.

Apparently, someone had stolen into the tent shared by two of my companions, Horace and Durant, and slain the sleeping Horace. Durant had been returning to the tent to wake his tentmate for watch duty when he found the body.

Studying the remains, I saw that the body was covered in hundreds of small wounds that seemed to be swollen with some kind of venom. There were also numerous bruises, like Horace had been viciously pummeled while being bitten by a swarm of insects. Suddenly another alarm went up on the edges of our camp. The culprit had been found!

Investigating, my comrades and I saw what appeared to be a man walking with a shuffling gait away from our camp. We repeatedly told him to stop, that we had numerous crossbows trained on him, and that there was no escape. We received no reaction.

Losing patience, Durant drew his longblade and charged.

The “man” spun around, and what we saw shocked us all. He was one of the walking dead, or so we thought. His dessicated, welter-skeleton body had numerous spiders of all sizes pouring from every orifice and crawling all over it.

Undeterred, Durant hacked his sword into the side of the thing. It bounded as if it were trying to feel a small tree as it thudded into the creature’s tough, dry flesh, and a horde of flying spiders came bursting forth from the thing’s body.

The rest of us engaged it with whatever weapon we had at hand and soon brought the thing down. As much as it disgusted some of my companions, I had to know what this thing was. I grabbed my dagger and set to work.

It seemed that the body was merely a husk (hence the name); that it had been hollowed out and made the home for a colony of spiders. Deep inside the chest cavity I found a large cocoon of thick webbing. As soon as I had pierced the outer coating of webbing, an enormous spider the size of a trollkin’s hand exploded forth from the cocoon. I quickly evaded its attack and put it down with my blade.

I speculate that this “heart spider” is like a queen in a beehive for the husk, that it gathers all of the other spiders (many of different species) about it for protection. I shudder to think of how this thing came to be, as the husk appeared to have been assembled and stitched together by human hands.

Combat

Besides pummeling with its relatively ineffective fists, the husk’s first method of attack is to get close enough to its victim to allow the myraid spiders that make up its “hive” to swarm over its victim.
Swarm (Ex): As a free action, many small spiders can swarm from the husk’s body and onto the body of any creature engaged in melee with it. The swarm attacks as a separate creature with the same attack bonus as the husk (+6 melee), does 1d4 points of damage, and can only attack one Medium-size creature at a time. This poisonous attack (DC 15) has initial and secondary damage of 1d6 Strength. Individual spiders in the swarm generally have 1–2 hit points and an armor class of 15. There will be 10–30 of such individuals in a swarm.

Hive Intelligence (Ex): The husk is in reality a colony of spiders controlled by the heart spider that inhabits and animates a Medium-size humanoid corpse. The myriad spiders that make up the husk exist only to feed and protect themselves and the heart spider. A heart spider separated from the hive will not survive for long, as the hive is its only protection. It also spins a cocoon of webbing around itself while lairing in the chest of the husk, through which the smaller members of the hive can feed. If the heart spider is encountered outside of the husk, it has 4 hp, an AC of 14, and has a weak non-poisonous bite (1d2 damage). Destruction of the heart spider or the husk results in the hive’s dispersal.

Fire Vulnerability (Ex): The husk’s dry, parched flesh causes it to take double damage from fire attacks unless a save is allowed for half damage. If the husk succeeds in a save attempt, it takes half damage; if it fails, it takes double damage.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: The husk is a rarely seen form of walking dead.
RARE: The husk is not undead. It is in fact a colony of spiders that inhabits and animates a human corpse.
OBSCURE: The husk is controlled by a “queen” spider of sorts that lives within its chest cavity. Destroy the queen, and you destroy the husk.

Treasure

The husk’s host’s body may have small items of wealth adorning it, depending on the wealth of the individual in life.

Hooks

The PCs have set up camp when a husk attacks them. This husk has more in mind than feeding, however. The heart spider within is gravid with enough eggs to create husks out of the entire party!
Infernal, Curator

Medium-size Outsider (Infernal, Neokronion Order)

Hit Dice: 11d8+33 (82 hp)

Initiative: +5 (+5 Dex)

Speed: 40 ft.

AC: 27 (+5 Dex, +16 natural, +6 armor)

Attacks: By weapon +16/+11/+6 melee, or 2 claws +13 melee

Damage: By weapon, or claw 1d1+2

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Pain touch, soul mark, spell-like abilities, spells, summoning

Special Qualities: Immunities, infernal presence, languages, life essence bargaining, metamegic mastery, resistances, telepathy, darksight, spell resistance

Saves: Fort +10, Ref +14, Will +16

Abilities: Str 18, Dex 20, Con 16, Int 19, Wis 22, Cha 22

Skills: Bluff +20, Concentration +11, Diplomacy +20, Forgery +9, Gather Information +20, Heal +16, Intimidate +12, Knowledge (arcana) +10, Knowledge (infernals lore) +12, Knowledge (specialty)

Feats: Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Finesse, +4 additional from the following: Blind-Fight, Combat Casting, Quick Draw, Spell Penetration, Combo 1 (Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack), Combo 2 (Ambidexterity, Two-Weapon Fighting, Improved Two-Weapon Fighting), Combo 3 (Power Attack, Cleave, Great Cleave). Although curators may use exotic weapons, they are not considered exotic to a curator (and thus do not require a feat to employ).

Climate/Terrain: Any

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: 12

Alignment: Always lawful evil

Advancement: 12-18 HD (Medium-size); 19-30 HD (Large)

I count myself quite fortunate that I've had only one encounter with one of the class of Infernal known to infernalists as the curators. I had been entrapped by a fellow student, named Adney Arkhim, gone mad in my early days at the university. I was bound and gagged, and the would-be infernalist had planned to use my soul as a battering chip for some petty gains. Unfortunately, for Adn...
Fortunately, curators can only typically make their way into this realm when directly summoned, although that summons bears little control over them. Although humanoid in appearance, they are always physically warped in torturous ways. They boast an extremely wide range of supernatural powers, and I have heard that they are universally masters of the arcane arts as well.

Combat

Curators tend to avoid direct conflict; when force is necessary, they usually call upon the powers of a myrmidon infernal. If forced to defend themselves, they tend to rely on their spells and spell-like abilities, although many are masters with melee weapons as well.

Curator Qualities

These are abilities common to all infernal curators.

- Equipment: All curators wear +4 magical leather armor that, because of its strange design, incurs no penalties to movement or casting. Their weapons additionally are usually magical, although the bonuses and special abilities of those weapons vary. Typical weapons of choice include greatswords, scythes, spiked chains, or falcions. They may be carrying additional magical items if it suits their needs at the time.

- Immunities (Ex): Curators are immune to all mind-influencing and charm effects as well as poison. They also can suffer the environments of both Caen and Urcaen, as well as those of their native domain, without penalty.

- Infernal Presence (Su): When a curator answers a summoning, the immediate environment becomes warped. This has a maximum range of 300 feet, however it restricts itself to the immediate area (for example, if summoned in a room, it closes off the room, if summoned in a warehouse it closes off the warehouse, etc.) Everything gets dark, there are strange sounds and lights, distant cries and the rattling of chains can be heard, a wind picks up where there should be none, and so forth. These circumstances cannot be dampened, and the summoner becomes trapped in this area (doors lock, debris blocks escape routes, etc.; escape by mundane means is impossible) unless the curator wishes otherwise. These circumstances also grant the infernal a +4 circumstance modifier to Intimidate checks.

- Infernal Discerning Beast: Curators are sometimes accompanied by a small infernal that has as innate spell-like ability to detect lies at will (as per the spell discern lies, cast as a 12th-level cleric). Forms vary, but all are small, bizarre abominations; they communicate with the curator through telepathy. The bizarre nature of these creatures adds an additional +2 circumstance bonus to the curator's Intimidate checks.

- Languages (Su): Curators understand all forms of verbal, somatic, and written communication with complete proficiency, and they may communicate through any form, so long as it is a physical possibility; should it be impossible, telepathy will be used.

- Life Essence Bargaining (Su): Occasionally curators will accept life essence as payment for a service. This benefits the individual curator and is thus not their primary objective, but a curator is always glad to boost its own power. An infernal may "sell" its own stat points to the curator, and once the curator has garnered enough essence (in the form of points), it can in turn boost its own stats. The conversion rate is 5:1, thus if a cure...
Infernai, Curator

for had bargained away 5 points of Constitution from various infernals; it could boost its own Constitution by 1 point. All ability score points bargained away in this fashion are lost permanently and irrevocably.

Metamagic Mastery (Su): Their close relationship with arcane magic allows them to use two of the following feats on a single spell without having to pay any of the costs (no increased level costs, etc.): Empower Spell, Extend Spell, Extend Spell, Heighten Spell, Maximize Spell, Quicken Spell, Silent Spell, Still Spell. They may use additional metamagic feats (beyond two) to enhance a spell, but they must pay half of the listed cost for using it. They may use metamagic feats not listed here, always only paying half of the listed cost for the enhancement.

Pain Touch (Su): As a standard touch attack, all curators can cause excruciating pain in a target. A struck target immediately suffers 1d4+2 subdual damage and must make an Endurance save (DC 21). Those who fail suffer one point of temporary Constitution loss and suffer a penalty of -2 to all attacks, skill checks, and saving throws for 24 hours. This penalty is cumulative with subsequent attacks.

Resistances (Ex): Each curator has resistance of 20 to two of the following: acid, cold, electricity, fire.

Telepathy (Su): Curators can communicate telepathically with any creature within 90 feet that is capable of understanding it, though they usually choose to speak aloud.

Darkvision (Su): Curators can see clearly in absolutely any kind of darkness, magical or otherwise.

Soul Mark (Su): Curators can place an invisible mark upon any soul marked for collection, which includes anyone they kill as well as souls sold in deals. This mark ensures that the soul will remain in this realm after death, until the infernals collect it. Anyone under the effects of a protection from evil spell is immune to this effect under involuntary circumstances only. Paladins, clerics (of all kinds), and other religious servant PC classes are immune to this ability, though they may forgive this immunity voluntarily. The DM's option characteristic that, while not paladins or clerics, who are particularly good might be allowed a Will save (DC 25) to resist this.

Circumstances such as bearing a holy symbol or being on holy ground might, at the DM's option, add a circumstance bonus to the roll.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—animate dead, detect magic, invisibility, light, mage hand, read magic, smoothe 3/day—charm person, darkness, ghost sound; 1/day—detect thoughts, detect good, detect magic, hold person, read line, lesser geas, mage armor, move, suggestion, teleport without error, true seeing 1/day—gues. These are granted by a wizard of level equal to the character's HD (Some DC usually 15 + level of the spell). The spells geas and lesser geas may only be cast upon a subject to force them to fulfill a contractual agreement.

Spells: All curators have the spell-casting abilities of wizards equal to their hit dice. Virtually all curators specialize in one school of magic, although general abilities vary greatly. The schools of Conjuration, Divination, Enchantment and Illusion are slightly more common than others.

Spell Resistance (Ex): All curators have a spell resistance of 10 + their HD.

Summoning (Su): A curator can summon additional infernals to Caen in certain circumstances. One is when it delegates its contractual duties to a myrmidon level Infernal for execution, in which case it summons the necessary myrmidon, instructs it about its duties, and then departs. Another is as a defense mechanism whereby the curator summons a myrmidon to fight in its place by literally swapping places with it instantaneously as a free action (the myrmidon comes to Caen, and the curator returns home).

Specialization

In addition to those qualities common to all curators, every curator bears some form of specialization. A typical curator will have 1-4 of these abilities. What follows are merely examples; some are far more common than others.

Tricks of the Trade (Ex): Because of their individual personality or because of advantages garnered in past deals, curators often have a specialty area when it comes to bargaining. When negotiating deals where they are able to play these advantages they gain a +1 circumstance bonus to Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks. Some examples of advantages are as follows:

Contiguous Wealth: The curator has a knack for stoking the fires of anger within an individual. They gain a bonus when vengeance upon another is at stake in a deal.

Deferred Payment: These infernals have a penchant for setting circumstances up for greater future gains, rather than immediate gains, and will take deferred forms of payment that otherwise seem quite innocuous. They gain a bonus versus subjects whose needs are very immediate.

Well Connected: The infernal has many connections on Caen. It gains a bonus when negotiating in regards to setting deals up through human (or humanoid) contacts.

Bargaining Chip: The infernal has established a large board of some sort somewhere on Caen that it uses in negotiating (it does not desire wealth itself). It gains a bonus when wealth is the desired gain of a contract.

Fruits of Desire (Su): The curator has the ability to summon illusory visages in a negotiating target's mind of the target's greatest desires. This is an Enchantment effect, and protection against such effects affects this ability. Victims receive a Will save (DC 21) to resist this ability. Those that fail suffer a -4 penalty to saves versus additional Enchantment (charm) spells cast by the curators during that particular negotiation. Additionally, the curators gain a +2 circumstance bonus to Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks against the target.

Nocturnal Terror (Su): Once the Infernal has sealed a contract with a given individual, it may reappear in that individual's dreams, turning them into horrific nightmares at the center of which is always the curator. The Infernal may not use any special abilities while in these dreams, nor may it be affected in absolutely any way. Curators frequently use this ability to terrify deal makers into making further deals and committing acts outside the bounds of their agreement.

Once the victim completes its contractual obligation, the Infernal may no longer exercise this ability over them.

Pain Lightning (Su): The infernal may shoot forth streaks of purple lightning from its fingertips. These function just as the pain touch ability, except they have a range of 30 feet. The attack is made as a ranged attack, not a touch attack. The lightning bolts may be kept fixed on a target, however a new attack roll is still required each round to affect the target again (don't forget the cumulative penalties).

"That simple, eh? I just sign here, and you'll take care of everything, right?" — The infamous Ciarda Tschol, upon signing her first infernal contract

---

I have indeed spoken with infernals—though I oft wish I had not. They are dangerous, but often knowledgeable and sometimes even sickly polite. Do not fear, I know better than to trust them, nor do I condone their unholy and depraved arts. I'd just as soon keep my soul; thank you very much!

— VP

Magnus - Unknown number.
Architects - Only 9?
Executors - 81, confirmed.
Curators - 6,561.
Myrmidons (warrior caste) - Countless.

Infernal - discerning beast
These infernal hounds are some of the most horrifying beasts I've ever had the displeasure of meeting. Several years ago, I traveled to Ceryl to meet with an acquaintance of mine by the name of Leander Ambrose. Leander was going to shed a little light on the nature of infernal contracts for me. He himself was no infernalist (or so I thought), but rather more of a scholar and expert on the subject.

I arrived at Leander's plush apartment over a curio shop in the Trade District ready for some insightful conversation. As I climbed the wooden external stairwell to the top floor of the building, I swore I heard some sort of commotion inside Leander's apartment. I pulled my blade and quietly pushed open the door, which stood ajar. I was not at all ready for what awaited me inside.

By the light of a single uncovered window, I witnessed a great serpentine beast as long as two horses sitting in the center of Leander's disheveled study. It was coiled around the motionless body of Leander. Anger seized me and I leaped completely over Leander's push Oriental drum and stabbed at the creature's back. That got its attention, but accomplished very little else. It quickly released Leander and struck at me like a swamp viper, and a wave of undoubtedly magical fear washed over me, dropping me to the rear. The creature then abruptly leapt over me and fled out the door. I shook off the magical terror and gave chase as fast as the door.

With one look outside, I could see no sight of the beast in the adjacent alleyway.

Looking at Leander's corpse, I saw that he had been ludicrously tortured then killed. Multiple bite wounds riddled his body, many of his bones were crushed, and his throat had been torn out. Exploring his apartment, I found what could only be explained as the trappings of an infernalist—one that makes pacts with foul beings not of our world. I'll not go into any more gruesome details.
I’ve done a bit of research in the time that has passed since that dreadful day and found that these beasts are called soul stalkers. Infernals use the stalkers to collect souls marked and barred from the afterlife. I don’t know the exact nature of their comings and goings, but given that Infernals must be summoned to this realm, I can only infer that they are somehow included in the minions of some infernal contracts. They may not be truly summoned by infernalists, but rather they may possibly be created on the spot when Infernals need souls collected from Caen.

Fortunately, I believe that these stalkers are here to fetch specific souls. They don’t wander the countryside, slaying all in their path, though it seems that their masters aren’t overly concerned if the stalkers manage to kill a few innocents along the way to their quarry.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Soul stalkers are essentially infernal hounds used to track down marked souls.

UNCOMMON: Soul stalkers are not summoned; they are created by other Infernals whenever there is a glut of souls to be collected.

RARE: Soul stalkers are generally sent to fetch the infernally marked souls of the dead, but are also sometimes sent to collect the souls of the living. They do this through ghastly acts of torture.

OBSCURE: If your soul bears no infernal mark and you cross paths with a stalker, simply get out of the way. If you’re lucky, it will ignore you for its true quarry.

Combat

Infernals use soul stalkers to collect souls, and the stalkers rarely let anything get in the way of that task. If someone or something stands in their path, the stalkers will typically attempt to circumvent the obstacle, but at times they will plow right through who or whatever stands in their way. After collection, the stalker confines the souls within its body and then returns to its master.

Soul Hound (Su): Soul stalkers have the uncanny ability to detect any marked soul in their vicinity. This ability works like a constant locate creature spell and functions as if cast by a 14th-level wizard. This ability, coupled with their scent ability, allows them to track virtually anything, anywhere.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a soul stalker must hit with a bite attack. If it gets a hold, it can constrict.

Constrict (Ex): A soul stalker deals 4d6+7 points of damage with a successful grapple check against Large or smaller creatures.

Invisibility (Sp): 3/day—This ability functions like the invisibility spell as if cast by a 14th-level wizard. This ability can be used only on the soul stalker.

Frightful Presence (Ex): This ability makes the stalker’s presence disconcerting to its foes and is triggered whenever it attacks.

Blindsight (Ex): Despite lacking eyes, souls stalkers suffer no penalties in combat. They can perceive all foes within 120 feet as a seeing creature would. Beyond that range, they treat all targets as being totally concealed.

Treasure

Soul stalkers generally carry no treasure. Their remains may fetch untold amounts of wealth from collectors.

Hooks

The PCs find themselves gainfully employed as bodyguards for a powerful wizard, who claims that a rival is out to destroy him. What the PCs don’t know is that the wizard is an infernalist, and his soul has been marked by the Infernals for collection. A soul stalker has been tracking him for weeks, and he now needs cannon fodder to protect him from the infernal hound.
Infernal, Umbral Reaver

Umbral Assassin
Medium-size Outsider (Infernal Myrmidon)
Hit Dice: 1d8+33 (82 hp)
Initiative: +9 (+5 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 40 ft., climb 20 ft.
AC: 29 (+5 Dex, +12 natural, +2 leather)
Attacks: Masterwork kris, short sword
+17/+12/+7 melee
Damage: Masterwork kris, short sword
1d6+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Frightful presence, poison, sneak attack +8d6
Special Qualities: Umbral abilities, damage reduction 15/+1
Saves: Fort +10, Ref +12, Will +9
Abilities: Str 17, Dex 20, Con 16,
Int 15, Wis 15, Cha 14
Skills: Balance +10, Climb +21,
Evasion Artist +14, Hide +19,
Intimidate +12, Jump +17,
Move Silently +19, Open Lock
+19, Search +12, Spot +12
Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency (kris short sword), Improved Initiative, Weapon Finesse (kris short sword)

Umbral Sorcerer
Medium-size Outsider (Infernal Myrmidon)
Hit Dice: 10d8+20 (65 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+4 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft., climb 20 ft.
AC: 24 (+4 Dex, +10 natural)
Attacks: Kris dagger +14/+9 melee
Damage: Kris dagger 1d4+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Frightful presence, poison, shade leech, spells
Special Qualities: Umbral abilities, damage reduction 15/+1
Saves: Fort +9, Ref +11, Will +10
Abilities: Str 16, Dex 18, Con 15,
Int 18, Wis 16, Cha 20
Skills: Alchemy +14, Climb +21,
Concentration +15, Hide +18, Intimidate +12,
Knowledge (arcana) +17,
Move Silently +18, Scry +17,
Spellcraft +17, Use Magic Device +18
Feats: Combat Casting, Maximize Spell, Spell Penetration

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 10
Alignment: Always lawful evil
Advancement: 11-14 HD (Medium-size)

Red Flags of even more powerful Umbral Truth!
Infernal, Umbral Reavers

I hesitate to discuss these fiends, but it is my duty as a scholar. First, they are infernals, creatures of pure evil who do not ordinarily walk our world. Even more frightening, the charm used to bring a reaver into service is so simple a child could do it, and it involves a price on the soul which cannot be repaired. I have not studied infernalism, but I do know other such creatures require powerful spells, elaborate contracts, and delicate preparation. Not so with umbral reavers. I believe they have worked out some ancient pact, beyond the scope of any single generation of mortals, whereby they have more ready access to our world, able to come here when called, even by the powerless and uninitiated.

I have never seen these infernals first hand, thankfully. But I have spoken to reliable witnesses who have seen them appear from nowhere, dispatch their targets, and vanish. Reavers are definitely not human, but they imitate our form. Gender is a choice for them—although they definitely prefer the female form, perhaps because the majority of their targets are male. I suspect their true form is as empty of detail as the shadows from which they draw their power. Individuals have proper names, though I do not wish to repeat any of them here.

All reavers have an affinity for shadows, into which they can leap to evade their opponents. They have great capacity for stealth. If you watch an umbral hop into shadow, watch your back, for she will spring upon you from anywhere there is darkness. Keeping to a room with bright lights and no shadows is a good defense. Be warned they are not directly weakened by light, but it does rob them of certain powers.

Umbral reavers employ wavy-bladed weapons, which they keep coated in noxious poisons. All reavers can climb nimbly, and possess unnatural quickness and strength of limb. They are most commonly called for the task of murder, and I have never heard of one of these assassins failing when called upon. The price is steep, for they take a portion of one's soul and essence as payment, and the beneficiary's shadow is diminished as a visible mark of this pact.

Summoning

Umbral reavers are the easiest of all infernals to summon because they require no arcane or divine magic. Research is still required to learn the ceremony and a passing knowledge of infernal lore certainly helps, but no actual spell is cast. True infernalis—those who make it their life's work to negotiate with infernals—do not deal with these creatures, as there is no contract to be bargained, and the price on one's soul is automatically paid.

The following lists the basic summoning ceremony used for the assassin; adjustments for the other reavers follow.

Umbral Reaver Summoning Ceremony

Assassin: In a darkened room with no windows, the summoner lights a black candle made with the blood of a winter calf. Next to the candle an offering is placed. The offering must be a valuable item, but more importantly must have significant personal value to the summoner. In the flame of the candle, the summoner blackens a dagger of pure silver and uses its edge to cut his palm. Using his own blood, the summoner writes the name of his enemy on a piece of parchment, pressing the wound of his hand against his heart, he says the following aloud: "By my blood, by my shadow, by my soul, death to him whom I have named!" The summoner then burns the parchment in the candle. An umbral assassin will step from his shadow and inspect the offering. If the offering is insufficient, the reaver will attack the summoner. Should the offering be acceptable, the reaver will step into his shadow, then emerge from the shadow of the enemy listed on the parchment (as if using teleport without error), and immediately attack.

Umbral reavers that attack their summoner will do so with the same deliberation and stealth as they would a regular target. They will pretend to be going after the summoner's target but will instead slip into the shadows and attack the summoner the moment he is vulnerable.

Sorcerer Ceremony Changes: The sorcerer ceremony is the same except the following: 1) The offering must be an enchanted item, preferably with a historical connection to the summoner's bloodline. 2) The name written on the parchment must include the formal name of a specific umbral sorcerer, along with the name of the enemy or location to be attacked. 3) The spoken incantation becomes: "By my blood, by my shadow, by my soul, bring destruction on my enemies!" At the end of the ceremony the umbral sorcerer steps into the summoner's shadow and appears at the enemy destination listed on the parchment to plot its attack.

Warrior Ceremony Changes: The warrior ceremony is the same except the following: 1) The offering must be a weapon, preferably with a historical connection to the summoner's bloodline. 2) The name written on the parchment must be the formal name of a specific umbral warrior. 3) The spoken invo-
Infernal, Umbrial Reavers

Umbrial Warrior
Medium-size Outsider (Infernal Myrmidon)
Hit Dice: 13d8 + 52 (110 hp)
Initiative: +3 (+3 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft., climb 20 ft.
AC: 31 (+2 Dex, +14 natural, +5 chain mail)
Attacks: Kris greataxe
+20/+15/+10 melee
Damage: Kris greataxe 2d6 + 5
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Frightful presence, poison, shade touch
Special Qualities: Umbrial qualities, damage reduction 20/+1
Saves: Fort +12, Ref +11, Will +9
Abilities: Str 20, Dex 16, Con 18,
Int 13, Wis 13, Cha 13
Skills: Balance +3, Climb +18,
Hide +12, Intimidate +13,
Jump +10, Listen +19,
Move Silently +12, Search
+11, Sense Motive +11,
Spot +19
Feats: Alertness, Combat Reflexes,
Power Attack, Weapon Focus
(kris greataxe)
Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 11
Alignment: Always lawful evil
Advancement: 14–18 HD (Medium-size)

The Umbrial warrior becomes: “By my blood, by my shadow, by my soul, I beg for protection!” At the end of the ceremony, the umbrial warrior retreats into the summoner’s shadow and is dormant until the summoner is injured in an attack, at which point it springs into action.

Consequences of Summoning

Assassin: While the reaver is active, the summoner will cast no shadow. Once the victim or assassin has been slain, the summoner’s shadow will become permanently faded. This can be noticed by knowledgeable clerics, paladins, or dabbles in infernal lore on a Knowledge (infernal) check (DC 20).

Enacting this ritual places a mark on the summoner’s soul (detectable with detect evil), and they will not be protected in the afterlife by their deity (even if evil). If they are not already of evil alignment, their alignment will become tainted by infernal corruption one step in that direction. (Chaotic good becomes chaotic neutral, and chaotic neutral becomes chaotic evil.) Furthermore, the summoner permanently loses one point of Strength, Constitution, or Dexterity. If the ceremony is repeated, the summoner’s shadow will fade even more, becoming almost unnoticeable, and alignment will again move one more step toward evil, and another ability point will be lost. If a person is truly repentant after summoning these creatures, alignment changes might be reversible at the GM’s option by a difficult quest for their church and an atonement ceremony, but their soul will remain marked and doomed in the afterlife short of direct divine intervention.

If the ceremony is repeated more than three times, there is a 50% chance the assassin will attack the summoner regardless of the offering (as above in regards to method of attack).

Sorcerer Summoning Consequences: Summoning a sorcerer incurs the same consequences as an assassin.

Warrior Summoning Consequences: The shadow of the summoner will not perfectly mirror the actions of the summoner while the warrior is dormant. The head may look a different direction; the arms and body might assume a different posture — this can be noticed on a Spot check (DC 18) so long as the summoner is casting a shadow. The DC may be lower if someone is specifically looking for this.

Combat

Each type of reaver has a different approach to combat, but all prefer to catch opponents surprised or flat-footed. Most reavers prefer to slay a target as quickly as possible.

Frightful Presence (Ex): This power makes the creature’s presence unsettling to foes, and is triggered whenever they spring from the shadows to attack (see MM). The save DC is Infernai, Umbral Reavers

17 for assassins and warriors and 20 for sorcerers.

Immunities (Ex): All umbral reavers are immune to cold, poison, and petrification attacks. They take half damage from fire and electricity and cannot be blinded.

Darkvision (Ex): Umbral reavers have darkvision 60 feet.

Shadow Evade (Su): In a move-equivalent action, the umbral reaver can enter any nearby shadow and Hide even if they are being observed. Successful Hide versus an opponent's Spot check means the reaver has gone invisible. They can then teleport to any shadow within line of sight. This is done to gain an automatic flanking attack.

Poison (Su): Reavers have the supernatural ability to maintain a coating of poison on their blades. This is an injury poison that requires a Fortitude save (DC 18), and failure causes the temporary loss of one ability score, which varies by reaver type. Each round later, if a following save is failed, there is cumulative ability score loss. Once a single save has been made the poison causes no further effects, nor will subsequent strikes with the poisoned weapon require further saving throws.

Umbral Assassin

Assassins never talk or answer questions during their attacks, although they may react with amusement to pleading or begging by a target. Once the target is killed, the blackened silver dagger from the summoning ceremony is stabbed into the victim's heart.

Assassins usually appear as beautiful but extremely pale-skinned female humans, with lithe bodies, black hair, purple eyes, and moving with sublime grace. They are dressed in tight form-fitting leather armor and wield a kris short sword. They cast no shadow but are otherwise quite solid and real.

The armor and swords are sometimes enchanted (25% chance each or GM's discretion).

Combat

The umbral assassin's primary combat technique is to use its sneak attack (just like a rogue) to deliver an immediately crippling wound. The initial strike, as they step out of the target's own shadow, is always a successful sneak attack unless the target has extraordinary or supernatural means of detection (such as unseen strike). Even if this fails, an umbral assassin is a dangerous combatant.

An assassin must slay its target within a single week or the onyiny. If their initial attacks fail or they are clearly facing a powerful target, the assassin will use its time to best effect, lying in wait and attacking when its target is most vulnerable. Some assassins enjoy cruelty and torment their target prior to killing them, but they usually do not waste such time.

Umbral Sorcerer

Sorcerers are perhaps the most dangerous of the umbral, able to unleash powerful spells. Sorcerers are summoned when an enemy is believed to be more susceptible to magic or if the summoner desires to destroy numerous lesser enemies or an entire building or other location.

Once the summoning ceremony is complete, the umbral sorcerer will appear from the shadows of the target or destination named in the burned parchment, causing whatever destruction is required. Once the enemy or location has been eliminated, the sorcerer will leave the blackened silver summoning dagger at the center of the destruction.

Umbral sorcerers usually appear as gaunt women garbed in a semi-translucent black gowns. They wield wavy bladed kris daggers, dripping with poison. They sometimes (25% chance or GM's discretion) manifest with one or more other useful (generally offensive) magic items, and their kris dagger is also sometimes enchanted (25% chance or GM's discretion).

Combat

Sorcerers are exceptionally intelligent, and they will take every possible advantage. They frequently remain hidden upon manifesting and try to discern the strength of their target, probing with lesser spells before engaging a full-out attack. If they determine their target is weak, they will attack with a barrage of offensive magic in an attempt to obliterate them decisively. Otherwise, more indirect methods will be taken against stronger or better prepared foes. Sorcerers always prefer to use spells, but are also capable of melee using their poisoned dagger. If the summoner's magic item offering is useful in the attack, the sorcerer will employ it against the targets, along with any other magic items.
Infernal, Umbral Reavers

They may possess. If facing a spell-caster, the umbral sorcerer will use shadow evade, Hide, and Move Silently to sneak upon the caster and employ its shade leech power to drain spells.

Poison (Su): Sorcerer poison causes the temporary loss of 1d6 Strength in the first round and 1d4 each following round (if subsequent saves are failed).

Shade Leech (Su): Umbral sorcerers can forgo regular attacks or spellcasting to attempt a special touch attack on an opponent. If successful, this will cause shadows to creep into the target's mind, wiping out a single prepared spell (randomly chosen among the highest level prepared spells), or eliminating a single daily spell slot (for sorcerers). If the sorcerer first casts spectral hand, it can deliver this attack at a distance.

Spells: Umbral sorcerers can cast arcane spells as if they were sorcerers of 12th-level (save DC 15 + spell level). They always know the spells greater shadow conjuration, greater shadow evocation, shades, shadow conjuration, and shadow evocation as a bonus in addition to other known spells.

Sorcerer Spells/Day: (includes Charmisma bonus)

6/5/4/3/2/1

Sample Sorcerer Spells Known: (9/5/4/3/2/1)

0—arcane mark, dark, detect magic, flare, ghost sound, light, mage hand, ray of frost, read magic; 1st—burning hands, charm person, color spray, hypnosis, magic missile; 2nd—darkness, invisibility, Fly's and arrow, spectral hand, detach, fireball, gaseous form, lightning bolt, major image; 4th—phantasmal killer, wall of fire, shadow conjuration, stonekin; 5th—dendrokil, cone of cold, greater shadow conjuration, shadow evocation; 6th-circle of death, greater shadow evocation, shades.

Umbral Warrior

Warriors are summoned to protect the summoner, not to slay a specific enemy, and are therefore commonly used by paranoid unscrupulous people who expect an attack at any time.

After the summoning ceremony, the warrior remains dormant, hiding within the shadow of the summoner until such a time as the summoner takes any serious bodily harm (25% of their total hp in damage or 10+ hp damage in a single attack). At this point, the warrior will spring forth from the summoner's shadow and attack whoever or whatever is threatening the summoner. They will remain until the attacker(s) or the umbral warrior has been slain. This is a one-time protection, after which the warrior fades away. The warrior does not distinguish between "enemy threats" which the summoner could deal with versus more serious threats. As soon as the summoner incurs adequate wounds, the warrior will manifest. There is no time limit on a dormant umbral warrior, which could wait for years prior to manifesting. Once threats have been eliminated, the warrior leaves the blackened silver dagger from the summoning ceremony on the ground by the slain attacker(s).

Umbral warriors usually manifest as attractive women, generally quite tall (over 6 feet), and very muscular, with short spiked black hair and crimson eyes. Each wields an enormous kris greatsword. They are armored in chain mail composed of tiny black links that shimmer darkly but make no sound. The armor and sword are sometimes enchanted (25% chance each or GM's discretion).

Combat

The umbral warrior's first priority is to protect its summoner. It may switch targets in mid-fight if the summoner becomes threatened by someone else. The umbral warrior is exceptionally strong and skilled with its deadly kris two-handed sword, which is coated with poison.

The umbral warrior has a special ability called shade touch that can be used to neutralize the armor of an attacker. It will only use this power if the opponent is particularly well armored. Unlike a shadow assassin, they are under no time constraints, so long as their summoner is out of danger. Once the threatening party is killed and the summoner is confirmed to be safe, the warrior will dissipate and vanish.

Poison (Su): Warrior poison causes the temporary loss of 1d6 Dexterity in the first round and 1d4 each following round (if subsequent saves are also failed).

Shade Touch (Su): An umbral warrior can forego an attack in a round to attempt a touch attack on an opponent's armor. If successful, the opponent's armor becomes insubstantial, fading to shadow for 2d4 rounds. Insubstantial armor provides no protection. Rendering both armor and shield insubstantial would require two different shade touch attacks.

Treasure

Umbral reavers do not carry valuables other than the offering and silver dagger used in their summoning. Their blades and armor are at least of masterwork quality, often decorated, and could fetch up to ten times the listed cost for short sword.
greatsword, and dagger (respectively to type). If sold to an actual collector of infernal artifacts, these items can command prices up to one hundred times the regular cost. In some cases these items are enchanted (generally +1 or +2) and will be worth considerably more. Any alchemist would pay quite well to get their hands on a vial of umbral reaver blood, due to their extreme rarity.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Umbral reavers are Infernals, but can be sum-mmoned via a relatively simple ceremony, usually for the purpose of assassinating someone.

UNCOMMON: There are three types of reavers: assassins, warriors and sorcerers. The details of the assassin summoning ritual can be attained at this level of lore.

RARE: Knowledge of warrior and sorcerer summoning ceremonies can be attained at this level of lore, along with specific formal names. Reavers have an ability to evade attacks and flake enemies, which does not function in a room with bright light and no shadows. People who have summoned reavers show faded shadows and a mark upon their soul visible with detect evil.

OBSOURE: Someone who has a dormant umbral warrior watching over him can be detected by his peculiar shadow.
Warriors have an ability to make armor insubstantial, and sorcerers have an ability to make casters forget their spells. It is rumored that the weapons of reavers are sometimes cursed, such that those who keep and use them attract malevolent attention. It is also said reavers are watched over by members of the Curate Proconsular of the Nonokiron Order, and those who attempt to exploit their summoning or avoid the consequences thereof may draw the attention of higher infernal powers.

Hooks

A murder investigation that is baffling the local authorities comes to the attention of the PCs, where an important local councilman died with no signs of breaking and entering. The only clue is a single silver dagger left in his chest. Researching this lead, the PCs learn about Infernals and the umbral reavers.
They will be able to track down the man behind the murder based upon his peculiar shadow. If they engage him they will find a formidable umbral warrior protects him, and if he escapes he will be foolish enough to risk summoning another assassin or sorcerer to destroy the PCs before they can prove his guilt.
Iron Lich

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Large Undead</th>
<th>(arcana) +19, Listen +10,</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice: 12d12 (78 hp)</td>
<td>Scrn +13, Search +10, Sense</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative: +4 (+4 Improved Initiative)</td>
<td>Motive +10, Spot +10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed: 30 ft. (can’t run)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC: 24 (-1 size, +15 natural)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks: 2 slams or claves +11 melee, or quarterstaff +13/+8 melee</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage: Slam or claw 1d8+5; or quarterstaff 1d6+7</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks: Spells</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities: Undead, +4 turn resistance, damage reduction 10/-1, immunities</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves: Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +11</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities: Str 20, Dex 10, Con ---, Int 18, Wis 16, Cha 16</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skills: Concentration +18, Craft (steamworks) +7, Knowledge</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feats: Brew Potion, Combat Casting, Craft Wondrous Item, Create Legend, Heighten Spell, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Quicken Spell, Scribe Scroll</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Organization: Solitary</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Challenge Rating: 14</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alignment: Usually Neutral evil</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advancement: By character class</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This example uses a 12th-level human wizard as the base creature.

How many times must my research be interrupted? In this field it seems far too many for my liking. I suppose, it is my choice. I could stay in the university, studying more ancient tomes than ancient toms, but out in the field is where real knowledge and history are found.

One such interrupted dig was deep within the Wymwall Mountains. My team and I had spent weeks searching for the hidden pass that would take us to the tomb of Ardin, archwizard of Caspia. We found the tomb and set to mapping and dissecting the many traps laid about it. After several days of this, we finally made our way into the central chamber where Ardin himself was allegedly interred with the legendary Draught of Shulls.

For the life of me, I could not decipher the crawling script etched into the face of the large stone doors just outside the burial chamber. I recall my study was cut short by a scream, followed seconds later by another. My colleagues brandished their weapons, and I did the same. We stood ready to face whatever horror caused our brothers outside to shriek in such a way.

Whatever it was now came stomping toward the chamber, nothing between the doors save us and our blades. Abruptly, several thralls, covered in more ruins than I had ever thought possible, sallied forth from that ancient crumbling archway, followed by a hissing, steamy monstrosity that I swear had to be a small steamjack save for that hideous human skull atop it, eye sockets aglow. It turned a malevolent visage upon me and gestured with a mechanical staff. I felt my limbs and joints become rigid as a board, held fast by its magic. Glancing around as best I could, I saw I was not the only one affected by the paralytic enchantment; we were all, every one of us, frozen in place. I remember thinking about all that I had seen and encountered in my days, and what an absurd way this was to end them, standing in place like some slack-jawed buffoon.

But the iron lich stepped past me, toward the sealed tomb, and spoke a word. The chamber door opened of its own volition, and the lich disappeared inside. While their master was within, the thralls amused themselves by torturing and killing my comrades. Whether they did this for their amusement or by their master’s order was beyond me. I simply prayed to Morrow that the magic would expire before it came to my...
I turned to go down with a fight, and perhaps take a few of them with me.

Moments later, the iron lich returned from Arfin's chamber, bearing two staves—one it bore upon entering and the other presumably the Dagonath of Shyr. It hissed a few arcane words and walked out of the tomb, followed diligently by its thugs. Why did it let us live? I can only assume we were beneath its notice. It had what it had come for—to my everlasting chagrin—and our presence was of no matter whatsoever. Aside from companions of mine lay in a pool of blood, slaughtered like lambs. I, for one, am grateful to have survived the day, and my encounter with an iron lich.

Creating an Iron Lich

In an attempt to attain immortality, the iron lich has sold its flesh and replaced it with a complex, mechanical apparatus that sustains its existence. The soul-fueled furnace on its back powers an intricate system of pumps and pistons that give the lich mobility and the strength of a half dozen men. Only the lich's skull, suspended weightless in an iron hood, betrays the once mortal life of this incarnation of evil.

"Iron lich" is a template that can be added to any humanoid creature that can complete the process required to create the iron lich's mechanical body. The creature becomes Large sized, and its type changes to undead. It uses all the base creature's statistics and special abilities except as noted below.

- Hit Dice: Increase to d12.
- Speed: Same as base creature.
- AC: The base creature's natural armor increases by +15.
- Attacks: The creature gains a slam attack and a claw attack that deal 1d8+5 points of damage.
- Special Attacks: An iron lich retains all the creature's special attacks that would not be affected by the almost total replacement of its physical body and also gains those listed below.
- Spells: The iron lich can cast any spells it could cast while alive. These spells now rely on souls to power them, however. The amount of spell levels the iron lich can derive from a soul depends on the level of the soul. A soul will power four times its level in spell levels. The soul of a 2nd-level fighter, for example, will power one 8th-level spell, or six 1st-level spells and one 2nd-level spell, and so on. An iron lich with no captured souls in its soul cages can cast nothing but 0-level spells.

Special Qualities

- Turn Resistance (Ex): An iron lich has +4 turn resistance.
- Damage Reduction (Ex): Iron liches have damage reduction 10/+1.
Iron Lich

Cold Vulnerability (Ex): An iron lich suffers no damage from cold attacks, but is slowed one round for each 10 points of damage that would have been inflicted. The effects are not cumulative.

Immunities (Ex): Iron liches have fire and electrical resistance 20.

Special Healing (Ex): An iron lich is not affected by heal spells. Mending cures 1 hp, Fabriate cures 5d8+5 hp. Iron Body cures all damage done to an iron lich.

Reliance on Fuel (Ex): Iron liches need a necromantic fuel called necrotite to function. They require refueling (roughly 5 pounds of necrotite) every 12 hours. If not refueled, its next hour of operation is spent fatigued. After that, the iron lich becomes exhausted for an hour, after which it is stunned. Its firebox then needs to be re-lit before it can function again. An iron lich engaged in strenuous activity or combat must refuel after 6 hours.

Firebox Vulnerability (Ex): An iron lich’s firebox fails when it is completely submerged in water or other liquid. Iron liches without a burning firebox are considered stunned.

Soul Sight (Su): Iron liches have the ability to see souls as if they had real soul cast at all times. They capture and hold these souls in soul cages to fuel their spells.

Save: As base creature.

Abilities: An iron lich suffers -4 to its Dexterity and gains +1 to Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma. Its Strength is raised to 20. It has no Constitution score as a result of its undead state.

Skills: As base creature.

Pears: As base creature.

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: 8

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: By character class

Combat

Magic Items Carried: Minor circle of blazing, +2 unholy quarters of spell storing, scroll of chain lightning (12th-level).

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.

UNCOMMON: An iron lich is an unholy combination of undead and mechnika. It’s hard to believe that any wizard, no matter how mad, would do this to himself.

RARE: Some say that iron liches can control both thralls and steamjacks just by concentrating.

OBSCURE: It is rumored that at least one of the Lich Lords of Cryx is in fact an iron lich.

Treasure

Iron liches will always have at least double the standard amount of treasure, some of which will be found on their person.

Hooks

A wealthy landowner has been courting a local beautiful wizard for several months now and has never seen or heard from her in weeks. He would normally chalk this up to rejection, but he hasn’t even received the usual threats of violence from her. He needs the PCs to visit her in her keep (which he won’t go near, especially after his last visit left him in the form of a fuzzy bunny for several hours) and make sure that all is well with her and deliver his gift of fine Cygnaran brandy unto her. The lady wizard has recently completed her transformation into an iron lich and couldn’t care less about the bratty or the unfortunate delivery boys who are about to stumble into her laboratory.

New Item

Soul Cage: These cages of metal and glass have been enchanted to contain the very souls of living creatures. As a standard action, the bearer simply has to open the door on the cage, and it will pull in any disembodied souls in a 50-foot radius. The cage can hold up to 100 levels worth of souls. The bearer of the soul cage can siphon the essence of the souls via a special valve located at the top of the cage.

Caster Level: 11th. Prerequisites: Craft Wondrous Item, or invisibility, true seeing. Market Price: 30,000 gp; Weight: 3 lbs.
I knew not what I was doing. Perhaps I should not speak, or let the familiar close their illusion for the dead on dying here. My legs are crumpled under a fallen doll and I am gasping in and out from the pain. The bones are shattered, I can taste blood on my lips, mingled with the sweet rain. Breathing is hard. Don't think I can last much longer, but I love to hear this story to the terror I have seen.

My name is unimportant, but let it be known that Brine's Riders fought well and bravely. We saw the end of a Northern border patrol. They weren't supposed to be anywhere near here. It was a blood bath. The fallen of both companies were left behind across the road, and Devere forced to take cover and dig in for the night. That's when the nightmare truly began.

I was huddled in a cast iron-fitted with mud and rainwater, dark and completely wet. Breathing my breath briskly raised my heart, too fast and cold. I was watching my death on the night air and cursing my luck. When I suddenly heard the racing clank of grinning metal. I did not hear it for when I looked over the edge of the trench, I saw an image that still remains etched in my brain as I died my last breath.

At first I thought it an armed madman, so much did the air obscure my sight, a heavy armed figure stepped out over a fallen Northern in a sudden moment. It held some type of dog-looking lantern light. The Northern's arm reached out weakly for the figure, as if beckoning for aid, but the armed one raised a heavy staff and pressed it into the face of the dying man. A bright green light then emanated from the lantern. It was not what I thought it was, but then I found our position, a series gun and two points of hellish green fire upon its grisly visage, atop a body constructed of black iron. I was looking at me. My home was in that rage.

I scrambled out of the trench and ran as it approached. Then, the screaming began. My blood was ice when the first batch of agony rent the air, a terrible and endless cry. I was forced to run, hear them shriek as their lives were extinguished in pools of fire and blood. But no eyes. I know of should be able to draw such a cry from a man. I could feel the heat, see the flames dance on the sides of the walls, feel the crackle of unnatural energy in the air. Those moments were indescribable. I did not even notice as a sudden wall came crashing down on top of me.

Flying there, I could do nothing but watch the immerse sight of that thing stalking amid the broken and burned bodies of my friends and enemies, flames gathering in pools on the mud. I could not help but think the god of its rage beautiful, so rigid it was mad with the lights—the walls!—I do not know what those it had killed.

Pain like nowhere else long since I lain here? Why was I left alive? I was always there. If I had any place left in me. I would think to myself, but I guess I am Brine's own.

Transcribed from a journal found on an unidentified mercenary officer of Brine's Riders.
Iron Maiden

Medium-size Construct

Hit Dice: 10d10 (55 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 24 (+14 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +12 melee; or 2 claws +12 melee
Damage: Slam 1d6+5; or claw 2d4+5
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Improved grab, impale, berserk
Special Qualities: Spikeskin, construct, damage reduction 15/+1
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +5, Will +4
Abilities: Str 20, Dex 11, Con —, Int

Skills: Balance +7, Climb +7, Hide +7, Listen +3, Move Silently +7, Sense Motive +3, Spot +3
Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Run, Track

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 7
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 11—16 HD (Medium-size)

The iron maiden is both an incredible creation and a travesty of the soul. On one hand, it is a construct of unsurpassed loyalty and wit, and on the other it is the enslaved spirit of a great warrior of the fairer sex. This construct is created by practitioners of the arcane as a means of self-preservation, or it is created for others in positions of wealth or authority for that same reason; the iron maiden is an effective bodyguard if ever there was one.

This construct, at first glance, appears to be a shapely woman, hooded and cloaked, as if engaged in some manner of skullduggery. Looking closer, one notices the distinct shine of metal here and there and a somewhat rigid gait and bearing. When ever the maiden or its master are threatened the construct reveals its true nature—hundreds of razor-sharp spikes and barbs spring from every portion of its body, ready to rend and kill at the drop of a coin.

My friend Barren Caulfield of the Fraternal Order of Wizards related the following to me:

“The metallic body is formed from the finest and purest iron to be found in the kingdom; purity of the iron must be ensured to withhold the powerful and fierce spirit to be contained inside. Only the most excellent artificers are allowed to take part in the creation of an iron maiden, and once the body is fashioned the wizard who is the binder inspects the work of the artificer. If it is to his or her liking, he summons the spirit of a female warrior from the lands of the dead and ensnare the spirit in the still-cooling iron body. The bound spirit soon finds it has very little control over her new body and little way of exercising her will on the world around this form. Often, this moment of truth is enough to forever bind the spirit to eternal servitude, but even so the newly made maiden tends to eventually lose her sense of self; in due time, the more sedate ‘she’ feels, and the more construct ‘it’ then becomes.

“In the weeks to follow from its birth, a maiden must be taught the ways of its nature and the purpose for which it was created—as bodyguard and assassin. The magics inherent in the creation of an iron maiden give it the abilities required to carry out these tasks; the ability to move with a measure of silence, to skulk about in the shadows, and the hidden weaponry to dispatch its target. Ironically, it is the spirit that gives the construct its gift for learning and intuitiveness—spikes, hooks, needles, and barbs to spring forth from virtually every inch of its body as a free action. This gives the maiden its impale attack and the option of using a claw attack in lieu of a slam attack.
Iron Maiden

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the iron maiden must hit with a claw attack.

Impale (Ex): A maiden that gains a hold latches onto an opponent's body and pulls it to its breast to be impaled upon dozens of hideous metal spikes. This attack automatically deals 3d4+8 points of damage.

Berserk (Ex): When a maiden enters combat, there is a cumulative 1% chance each round that the bound spirit within it breaks free and goes berserk. The unbound construct runs amok, attacking the closest creature or smashing a random object if no creature is within reach, then moving along to spread more chaos. The maiden's master, if within 100 feet, can try to regain control by speaking firmly, persuasively, or threateningly to the construct, which requires a successful Charisma check (DC 15). It takes 30 seconds of rest by the maiden to reset its berserk chance to 0%.

Resistances (Ex): Iron maidens have fire and electrical resistance 20.

Special Healing (Ex): Iron maidens are not affected by healing spells. Mending cures 1 hit point. Fabriate cures 5+8+5 hit points. Iron body cures all damage done to an iron maiden.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Only a fool dares to try the patience of a man protected by a maiden.

UNCOMMON: Iron maidens are possessed of an alien intellect, unheard of in modern mechanika.

RARE: The maiden's body is simply a conduit for the spirit of a deceased woman.

OBSCURE: Excessive exposure to a maiden's former life may awaken buried memories giving the bound spirit free reign of its forged metal body.

Treasure

An iron maiden's body is made of the purest iron to be found in the Iron Kingdoms. A large amount such as that found comprising the maiden's body could fetch a hefty sum at the Steam & Iron Workers' Union, Engines East in Corvis, or Engines West in Point Bourne. Wheeling an inert iron maiden into either one of these establishments may raise a few eyebrows, to say the least.

Hooks

- A well-to-do wizard was recently denied membership in the Fraternal Order of Wizardry. In retribution, he would like some expendable hirelings to battle the head of the order's iron maiden whilst he engages the offending wizard. The outraged wizard will pay handsomely for any unrepentant ruffians willing to take on this errand, no questions asked.

- A formidable wizard in Corvis has been slain by his own iron maiden—perhaps even the spawned wizard abode! The wizard somehow lost control of the construct and it is now ravaging the streets of the city. The maiden has already plowed through a squad of Watchmen, and now an affluent noble appeals to the PCs for help in dispatching the berserk construct.
Kaelram

Huge Animal
Hit Dice: 12d8+60 (114 hp)
Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
Speed: 50 ft.
AC: 16 (-2 size, +1 Dex, +7 natural)
Attacks: Gore +17 melee, 2 slam +11 melee
Damage: Gore 3d6+15, slam 2d6+5
Face/Reach: 10 ft. by 20 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Trample 3d6+15

 Saves: Fort +13, Ref +9, Will +4
Abilities: Str 30, Dex 12, Con 20,
Int 2, Wis 10, Cha 7
Skills: Jump +15, Listen +5, Spot +5
Climate/Terrain: Any desert
Organization: Solitary or herd (4–16)
Challenge Rating: 9
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 13–23 HD (Huge)

It was while traveling through the parched northern regions of the Protectorate of Mreno that I endeavored to discover more about the Bloodstone kaelram, a common beast that bears the exotic moniker of “thunderhead,” on account of the resounding blows it strikes during its mating season duels.

These massive, powerful herbivores are used as beasts of burden throughout the rural north of the Protectorate, though their value extends far beyond that of any common dray beast. Judging by the preponderance of kaelram hide tents, bowls, tankards, armor, fresh and dried kaelram cuts, and the outrageous prices commanded for intricately carved kaelram head stools, I would not hesitate to say that this beast also forms a staple of the local economy.

Having ample opportunity to study domesticated kaelram, I must admit to the beast’s intimidating nature, for it is a massive mammal, standing powerfully atop four long, strong legs. Its dusty hide has a smooth, pebble-like texture, and its feet end in tough spayed hooves that grant it purchase in the arid sands of its native habitat. Its small, flat face and tiny eyes are overshadowed by the enormous pair of tusks that juts out from its mouth.

Eager to observe these powerful beasts in their native habitat, I once again enlisted Quinun and set forth into the arid lands of the southern Bloodstone Marches. A few hours outside of the Protectorate, we were in the process of skirting a small foothill when Quinun paused for me to stop. Doing as I was bid, I felt the ground resonate as a small herd of kaelram loped into view. As I watched, fascinated, a rumbling below split the air, and the herd’s dominant male turned, snorting, to face a lone challenger. Without a moment’s hesitation, the two bulls thundered towards each other, heads lowered.

They met head to head like living battering rams, and the booming crack of their impact echoed across the dusty plains. A second later, the two reared up and were viciously lashing each other with their tusks and with powerful crushing swipes of their forelimbs. Moments later, the challenger lay dead. Seldom have I seen such speed in so powerful an animal; small wonder several Shael tribes make use of the kaelram as a beast of war.

Combat
Kaelram are aggressive combatants, their first instinct to charge, gore, and trample anything they consider a threat. Should the unfortunate victim of a kaelram charge survive and continue to move without fleeing, the kaelram will rear up on its hind legs and proceed to repeatedly gore and stomp the victim. These animals are so obnoxious that they seldom flee even serious threats, save when the protection of their calves is an immediate concern.

Trample (Ex): A kaelram may trample Medium-size or smaller targets for automatic damage. If such a target attempts to avoid the trample, they may make a Reflex save (DC 26) to take half damage.
Treasure

A trained kaelram suitable for use as a beast of burden usually sells for 300 gp. A kaelram barbarian-trained for use as a war mount and living battering ram would be traded for no less than 1,000 gp in appropriate goods, such as metal weapons and armor; if the Shael ever demonstrated any desire to sell such a beast.

The hide of a kaelram, suitable for domestic use in the making of items such as bowls, rough tents, or hide armor, typically fetches 20 gp in the markets of the Protectorate of Menoth. Kaelram meat is sold for 6 sp per pound.

The kaelram’s tusks are extremely valuable and are worth as much as 100 gp each to skilled ivory carvers.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Kaelram tusks are highly prized by many artisans and once carved and polished can command handsome prices.

UNCOMMON: Kaelram instinctively judge threats based on a combination of speed and size. A smaller or slower moving animal is far less likely to be attacked. Standing stock still or playing dead will usually avert a kaelram attack.

RARE: While kaelram vision is particularly sensitive to motion it is otherwise quite poor. These animals are just as likely to charge swift-moving wagons as a rival kaelram.

OBSCURE: Kaelram dung, though pungent in the extreme, has powerful astringent properties when fresh.

Hooks

Kaelram are valuable animals, and eager to cash in on the wealth generated by foreign demand for carved kaelram tusks. Many individuals are turning to hunting the beasts. The party could be one such enterprising group. As if the animals themselves weren’t enough to contend with, local Shael tribes take a very dim view of outsiders hunting kaelram on their land...
Lemax

Small Beast

Hit Dice: ½d10+2 (4 hp)

Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)

Speed: 30 ft.

AC: 14 (+1 size, +2 Dex, +1 natural)

Attacks: Claw -1 melee; or bite -1 melee; or acidic spit +3 ranged

Damage: Claw 1d3-2; or bite 1d3-2; acidic spit 2d4+1 and nausea

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Acidic spit

Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft.

Saves: Fort +4, Ref +4, Will +1

Abilities: Str 6, Dex 15, Con 13, Int 5, Wis 12, Cha 10

Skills: Balance +10%, Climb +4%, Hide +3%, Listen +3, Move Silently +3%, Spot +3

Climate/Terrain: Any forest

Organization: Gang (4-9), troop (10-40 plus 1-2 HD alpha male), tribe (40-400, including 1-2 HD beta male per 20 adults, 1-3-4 HD alpha female per 50 adults, and 1-4+ HD alpha male)

Challenge Rating: ½

Alignment: Usually neutral

Advancement: 2-3 HD (Small); 4-10 HD (Medium-size)

---

The lemex (or "lizard monkey") unfortunately can be found scattered throughout the forests of the Iron Kingdoms. At their best they are a nuisance and at worst outright brigands. Over the years I have had more than my fair share of run-ins with these pests, and, though individually weak, beware of them when they're in numbers.

A grotesque mixture of scaly skin and tufts of hair, the main features of the lemex are its exaggerated facial structure, thick black mane, glowing yellow eyes, and prehensile tail. Their main weapon is an acidic spittle that they emit from a mucous sack located deep within their throat, but they also love to throw rocks. Lemex have a unique but primitive language of boos, howls, clucks, and hisses.

Lemex rarely attack head on, preferring instead to nip at your heels (until one day you wake up to find your feet missing). They are persistent pests, always testing your nerves and patience. They excel at harassment, especially in the night.

They bellow and bawl, scare horses, and they even sneak into camps just to kick out your fire. It is also not uncommon to wake from a quiet evening's rest to find your sacks rummaged through and your best pair of trousers docket on. But I digress.

The trees are a home to the lemex, and it is best to camp in clearings if at all possible when traveling through their territory. Another piece of advice I would give, if you wish to avoid a confrontation with the lemex, is to leave a peace offering outside your camp. This works only if you have not harmed any lemex and they feel satisfied by your gift. A peace offering should include both foodstuffs and shiny things. If found to be sufficient, the lemex will leave you alone; if not they will most likely spit in your face.
Combat

Lemax prefer to outnumber their opponents and rarely attack any group that they do not outnumber two to one. They tend to use hit and run tactics and use their skills and abilities to their utmost advantage.

Acidic Spittle (Ex): A lemax's main defense is its acidic spittle. This attack is considered a ranged touch attack and has a range of 30 feet. It deals 2d2+1d4 damage, and unless the victim makes a Fortitude save (DC 10) he becomes nauseated for 1d4 rounds. Once a lemax has used this ability it cannot use it again for one hour.

Skills:
Lemax use their Dexterity modifier for climb checks and receive a +8 racial bonus to Balance checks from their tails. They also gain +4 circumstance bonus to Hide and Move Silently checks made in forested areas.

Treasure

Lemax mucous sacks are useful to both alchemists and arcane spell-casters and are worth about 10 gp each. Lemax also have cheek pouches where they store their "shiny things." Each pouch has a 75% chance of holding said shiny things. If a cheek pouch is found to contain shiny things, then there is a 75% chance that coins are found, 20% chance that a gem of some sort is found, and a 5% chance that a piece of jewelry is found.

Coins found in a lemax's cheek pouch usually number 2-20 (2d10) of a random type (1d10, 1-2: copper, 3-5: silver, 6-9: gold, 10: platinum). Gems found in a lemax's cheek pouch vary widely in their worth, Jewelry in a lemax's cheek pouch varies widely in its worth as well (use the art table in the DMG for inspiration).

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Don't get spit on by lemax—it hurts and smells bad too!
UNCOMMON: Lemax have cheek sacks where they hide their shiny things. Their mucous sacks are valuable to alchemists and arcane spell-casters alike. Peace offerings that include shiny things are accepted more often than not (25% chance of failure).
RARE: When a lemax is pleased with an offering or likes an individual, it regurgitates its most recent meal as a sign of its acceptance and appreciation.
OBSCURE: Peace offerings that include bananas and/or other yellow things are almost always accepted (5% chance of failure).

Hooks

An enterprising goblin alchemist from Five Fingers approaches the PCs, offering to pay them handsomely if they can bring him no less than one dozen live lemax. He claims that he needs their acid pouches for his alchemical research.

The truth is that he is going to set them free in his former employer's lab (he was recently fired) as a sweet revenge (the money he's using to pay the PCs is stolen from this same fortune employer).

"I think he likes you, Edrea. He only got on my leg..." - Lyra Wreckheimer
When I was still a junior scout in the Cygnaran military, I made my first trip to Point Bourne, and it was there that I first encountered one of these bizarre mecha-gargoyles. I had remembered my father telling me about them when I was quite young. He had that distant look in his eye that he always got when speaking of such constructs—that look that somberly acknowledged that he was just a poor junker who could at best only hope to sell parts for such a creation, never possessing the skill or resources to create one himself. Clearly he thought they were impressively, and I finally viewing one I had to agree. The mecha-gargoyle I witnessed was sculpted in the likeness of a magnificent winged feline, and it sat patiently atop one of the city's more grand estates.

Although there is a long-standing craftsmen's guild in Menth that claims to have originally mastered the art of mecha-gargoyle construction, my father had always insisted that they bore more esoteric origins. He claimed that only the crafty faithful of Cyreus could have crafted such a wondrous creature, although I've never found evidence to back up his claim. The strange thing about these constructs that distinguishes them so much is that their internal drive comes from a spirit that takes residence inside the shell of the construct, which is itself quite mundane. Only the most finely constructed forms will attract an animating spirit, and once one has taken up residence it will never leave its metal body. Constructing a shell is a rare art, and even the best craftsmen often find their works ignored by the fickle spirits.

Simplicity seems to be their nature of the mecha-gargoyle. They are universal in their purpose, which is to protect an occupied building in just about any urban city. They are very patient creatures, and despite the residing spirit, I've never witnessed one bearing any personality. The only thing they require of the tenants whose buildings they guard is a regular supply of processed iron, preferably in bars. Those who fail to provide for their gargoyles soon find them gone.

Mecha-gargoyles come in all varieties (from animal shapes, to humanoid, to even stranger things), although most are about 3 or 4 feet in height or length. The craftsmanship required to construct one... is the highest, and those that bear fine and intricate ornamentation seem to have a better success rate in the creation process. For a construct, they are surprisingly nimble, and they are quite vigilant in their guard duties. The magic that binds them together also enables them to fly, as well as exercise a few other abilities. Although intelligent, they are completely incapable of communication (so you had better know what to do when one lands on your stoop).

Combat

Mechagargoyles will typically initiate combat with their spell-like abilities and then follow up with melee combat if necessary. If overpowered, they will flee, never to return to that ward. The attack forms and damage scores listed above are those of a typical mechagargoyle. Because forms vary widely, other types of natural attacks may be possible.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—fly; 5/day—flame, darkness; 3/day—lightning bolt, gust of wind. They cast these spells as an 8th-level wizard (save DC 11 + spell level).

Stunning Strike (Su): A melee strike by a mechagargoyle deals an additional 1d6+1 electrical damage. On a successful critical strike, the victim must also make a Fortitude save (DC 13) or become stunned for 1d4+1 rounds. There is no visual discharge with this attack, even in darkness.

Regeneration (Su): As long as they are fed a steady diet of processed iron (at least 5 pounds a week) mechagargoyles heal damage as a normal living creature.

Vigilance (Ex): Mechagargoyles are eternally vigilant and may not be surprised.

Treasure

A mechagargoyle is a treasure in and of itself; however, they may not be forced into service and will always flee if captured. They choose their wards spontaneously, and only leave them when they are not properly fed.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: In more affluent cities, some of the gargoyles perched atop buildings are actually living constructs that come to life to protect the building.

UNCOMMON: These creations are mechanika shells housing a living spirit of some kind.

RARE: If one lands on your building, then you are quite lucky. To keep it you must feed it refined iron.

OBSCURE: The clerics of Cyris are said to build the best mechagargoyles, and theirs are rumored to have vastly greater magical abilities.

Hooks

A wealthy scholar of the arts in Gery, was fortunate enough to have a stray mechagargoyle make his home its ward. He was both fond of and fascinated by the creature and maintained it well. Unfortunately, a disreputable black market dealer in the area caught wind of the gargoyle's presence and decided to steal it. After capturing it three times only to have it fly back to its previous ward, the dealer has caught it once again and plans to sell it on the black market (for parts if he has to). The original owner is desperate to regain his home's companion and is seeking help.
Mechanithrall

Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 4d12 (26 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 21 (+1 Dex, +10 natural)
Attacks: 2 slams +4 melee
Damage: Slam 1d8+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Steamslam
Special Qualities: Undead, +2 turn resistance
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +3, Will +4
Abilities: Str 16, Dex 13, Con —, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 6
Skills: Climb +6, Hide +4, Listen +3, Move Silently +5, Spot +3
Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes
Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Any
Challenge Rating: 3
Alignment: Usually lawful evil
Advancement: 5–7 HD (Medium-size)

I’ve only once had the unfortunate occasion to meet these foul undead perversions. I was in the company of some fellow explorers out of Highgate, surveying one of the many unnamed Schandle Islands. We had just located a very rare nocturnal species of primate indigenous to this island alone and had retired to our camp to study the few specimens we had captured and log our activities for the day.

Suddenly, from the darkness of the trees around us came a strange hissing, like that of a kettle boiling over. My friend Elin Caulfield then gave out a strangled cry. Turning about, I saw a horrible amalgamation of metal and desiccated flesh standing over poor Elin’s crumpled form. Looking around, I saw at least a dozen of these monstrosities assailing the rest of my party. I quickly grabbed my trusty bow and began firing arrows after arrow into these “mechanithrals,” as I came to call them. It took several arrows to fell but one of the creatures, so I quickly changed tactics and used the swell our guides had been drinking, called Finger’s Fume, to best effect. After dousing them with the liquid and lighting them in our campfire, my flaming arrows seemed to have more of an impact on our enemies, as flames generally do. It is my opinion that the mechanithrals were “called off” somehow, as they then turned in unison and retreated from our camp. We counted two of our number lost to the attack, and all of our specimens had escaped their cages in the confusion.

We then hastily packed our gear and retreated to our boat. We spent the rest of the night anchored in the shallow cove in which we had come aground, trying the shore-line intently, hoping that the mechanithrals couldn’t swim. We steamed for Highgate first thing the next morning. Someone or something had made those terrible things, and I had the feeling that I didn’t want to meet him.

Combat

Mechanithrals attack only at their master’s behest or if they have been given orders to attack certain beings under specific circumstances (guarding a door or passage against intrusion, for example). They never use weapons, preferring instead to pummel their foes.

Steamslam (Ex): Once every 1d4 rounds, a mechanithrall can use the steam built up in its mechanical fittings to deliver a powerful punch to its opponents. It gains a +8 attack bonus for the steam slam attack only and deals 3d6 points of damage.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: Mechanithralls are a hideous combination of undead and mechanika.
RARE: The mechanithralls are created somewhere in the Schande Islands, and a few have even been spotted along some of the more uninhabited coasts of Cygnar.
OBSCURE: Lord Toruk, the dragon king of Gyrax, sanctioned the mechanithralls' creation for unknown reasons, though the Dragon King seems to be brewing something major.

Treasure

A mechanithrall's vanquisher may scavenge whatever pieces of mechanika may be left on its broken body. Mechaniks on the mainland will pay handsomely to have the opportunity to study the unfamiliar machinery.

Hooks

Characters exploring the Schande Islands may happen upon the hidden lab where the mechanithralls are created. The mechanithralls' creator is said to be an undead mechanik of immense power and knowledge. The thralls' creator will spare no expense in killing the invaders or driving them from his island.
Moonwing

Small Vermin

Hit Dice: 1d8+1 (5 hp)
Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
Speed: 10 ft., fly 20 ft. (poor)
AC: 18 (+1 size, +3 Dex, +4 natural)
Attacks: Bite -1 melee
Damage: Bite 1d4-2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Moon dust
Special Qualities: Vermin
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +3, Will +0

Abilities: Str 7, Dex 16, Con 12,
Int 1, Wis 10, Cha 2
Skills: Listen +8°, Spot +11°
Feats: Ability Focus (moon dust)
Climate/Terrain: Any warm or temperate land
Organization: Brood (3-10) or swarm
(11-24)
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 2-4 HD (Small)

I've witnessed many strange beasts in my travels of this world, but there are few that I'd venture to call beautiful or even pleasant to look upon. Most of the denizens of the Iron Kingdoms are fierce, with an appearance to match. However, there is one I'd have to call an exception to that, and it would be the fluttering moonwing. I remember one fine evening while camping in the Scarfell Forest, our campsite was graced by a brood of these creatures.

As they flocked to our campfire, their white bodies lit up with a gentle luminescence that was a sight to behold. This effect is due to the dust that coats their wings, commonly referred to as moon dust. Of course, the other effect of this moon dust is putting man and beast alike into a deep slumber, which is precisely what happened to most of my companions that evening, as the moths flittered overhead. I managed to roll out of harm's way and chase the creatures off with a burning log from the fire. The dust did make me quite groggy, however, and I'm sure the sight of me stumbling clumsily in the dark swinging at a pack of fleeing moonwings was something to behold as well.

Although they measure a full meter across at the wings, these creatures are little more than overgrown moths, and like all moths they are attracted to light. They are nocturnal, and most travelers encounter them as they flock towards a torch or campfire. They are peaceful creatures; however, when they flutter overhead, their dust sprinkles down, putting to sleep most who fail to scatter them off. This in and of itself isn't a danger, but being knocked out in the wilds of the Iron Kingdoms can be deadly.

Combat

Moonwings are capable of biting, but they only bite in self-defense, and even then only rarely. Most of the time they simply flee. Their real danger is when they inadvertently sprinkle creatures with their moon dust.

Moon Dust (Su): Any creature that has a moth fly over its space is sprinkled with moon dust unless they make a Reflex save (DC 14) to hop safely to an adjacent space; however, note that if there are a large number of moths, then there may not be an adjacent square to escape to. Creatures that are sprinkled with dust become groggy and fall asleep, as if affected by sop. A Will save (DC 12) prevents this; however, all creatures are still subject to grogginess. Those affected by the sleep-inducing effects are subject to grogginess for 1d4 hours after being woken; those who save are affected immediately and for 4d6 minutes thereafter. This induces a -2 circumstance penalty to all attacks, saves, and skill checks for the duration. Creatures unaffected by sleep are also unaffected by this ability.

Skills: *Moonwings gain a +4 racial bonus to Listen and Spot checks.

Treasure

The moonwing’s potent moon dust is quite a valuable commodity, although it is difficult to collect effectively. To do so, one must first capture a moonwing and then take care of it. If the wings are damaged in the capture, then most moonwings fail to continue producing dust. Furthermore, they are very fragile creatures and die suddenly and easily in captivity. A successful Handle Animal check (DC 18) must be made each week to keep a moth healthy; two consecutive failures result in death. Moonwings survive better in broods (groups of at least five or more) as well as open spaces (such as a cave, as opposed to a cage); either of these circumstances adds a +2 bonus to the die roll. Additionally, they only feed on grubs that are exotic to most areas, and food costs can run as much as 100 gp a month. If they are properly maintained, however, then collecting the dust is simple, as it falls naturally from the wings (and can be swept up).

Moon dust collected in this manner has the same properties as above, except that the save DC rises to 18. Because of its potency, a typical batch (containing 2 doses) sells for anywhere from 100 to 150 gp. A single moth can produce one dose every other day. A healthy captured moonwing can sell for anywhere from 500 to 1000 gp. They do not breed in captivity, and they seldom live beyond a year.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Moonwings are large moths that flock to open lights, and they can put people to sleep with dust from their wings.

UNCOMMON: This moon dust is extremely potent and is guaranteed to at least make a subject groggy; if it doesn’t knock him out.

RARE: Moonwings are only attracted to natural flame light produced by magical or similar means (that does not replicate a natural light) won’t attract them.

OBSCURE: Moonwings can be knocked out instantly if they catch a whiff of alcohol fumes, although one must get it right up to their face to affect them.

Hooks

A rather eccentric alchemist in the city of Ceryl has taken up the mission of stalking down a ring of thieves who use moon dust to knock their marks out. He believes he can create a smelling salts-type of antidote to counteract it, although he suspects it might only be effective versus regional species of the moth. He is willing to pay those who can collect specimens from the surrounding area for his inspection.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Nyss</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Medium-size Humanoid (Elf)</td>
<td>Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice:</td>
<td>Hide +4, Listen +2, Ride +2,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative:</td>
<td>Spot +2, Wilderness Lore +2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed: 30 ft.</td>
<td>Feats: Exotic Weapon Proficiency</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC: 14 (+1 Dex; +3 studded leather)</td>
<td>(Nyss claymore), Weapon Finesse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks: Nyss claymore +2 melee; or short sword +0 melee; or longbow +1 ranged</td>
<td>(Nyss claymore)*</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage: Nyss claymore 2d6; or short sword 1d6; or longbow 1d8</td>
<td>Climate/Terrain: Cold mountains</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.</td>
<td>Organization: Patrol (2–8), hunt (9–16),</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities: Nyss traits</td>
<td>war band (12–60), shard (80–200), or tribe (200–800)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves: Fort +0, Ref +2, Will +1</td>
<td>Challenge Rating: 1/2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities: Str 11, Dex 13, Con 11</td>
<td>Alignment: Usually chaotic neutral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advancement: By character class</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In the mountains north of Khador, amid the crags and crevices of the barren ice and glacial drifts, there are monolithic formations called winter stones. They stand as a foreboding warning to travelers, marking the territory of the guardians of the north, the winter elves, properly known as the Nyss.

Knowing of their willingness to slay intruders on sight, I felt trepidation when I undertook an expedition alone past those stones. I had been instructed in dealing with this race by a well-traveled Khadoran trader, who advised covering my weapons and bringing a gift to show my intentions.

I eventually made peaceful contact and was brought blindfolded to one of their villages. The Nyss are never completely at ease with outsiders, and I was watched at all times. Hospitality has almost religious significance with them; while they will slay any who intrude uninvited in their territory, once they have welcomed a visitor they are liberal with food, wine, and company.

The Nyss have prospered in their barren frozen wasteland and have virtually no contact with the elves of Ios. There is no mistaking the two races for each other; the Nyss are very tall, most males well over 6 feet in height, and their skin is pale as bone. Their hair is either black or nearly white, and their eyes ice-blue or sometimes violet.

They resent questions about their religion, but I was able to learn a few things. They take their name from their patron god, Nyssor, the god of winter.

Nyssor is also respected among the elves of Ios, but as a lesser seasonal deity. I have found anermatic reference of a sleep from which he cannot wake, but do not know the significance of this.

The major Nyss tribes number approximately a dozen, each composed of four or five "shards," the core unit of society. Shards are settled near glacial lakes and valleys, and groups of hunters travel between them looking for game and enemies. Traditionally, every few decades a shard will pack all its belongings and travel among neighbors, sharing news and forming alliances and marriages.

The Nyss contend for territory and resources with various tribes of fierce mountain ogre gobblers, ogre conclave, and have occasional skirmishes with human barbarians and the dwarves of Rhud.
Combat

Nyss prefer to use misdirection and trickery to guide foes into ambushes or traps and will always attack from concealment if possible, first with arrows and then closing for melee.

The Nyss weapon of choice is a great two-handed claymore. These blades are always of masterwork quality and some are enchanted. When fighting in cramped quarters, Nyss use short swords.

Weapon Finesse (Claymore): This feat usually requires one-handed weapons. However, the Nyss train from youth with their claymores, and the weapons are so light (weighing 8 pounds instead of the 15 of a typical greatsword) and well-balanced that this restriction does not apply.

Nyss Traits (Ex): All Nyss benefit from a number of shared traits. Nyss are sufficiently different from regular elves that they do not receive normal elf traits.

- +2 racial bonus to Listen, Spot, and Hide skill checks.
- +4 racial save vs. cold-based spell attacks.

Nyss are resistant to the effects of cold weather and do not suffer penalties from cold conditions until 40°F lower than normal. For example, they experience cold conditions at 0°F and extreme cold at temperatures of -40°F and below.

-2 racial save vs. fire or heat-based attacks.

Nyss are particularly vulnerable to hot weather when wearing any armor greater than studded leather (or equivalent), suffering as if enduring hot or extreme heat conditions at 20°F lower than others. For example, they experience hot conditions in temperatures greater than 70°F (instead of 90°F) and extreme heat in temperatures greater than 90°F (instead of 110°F).

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.

UNCOMMON: The Nyss are highly territorial, prone to attacking invaders in their territory without revealing their presence.

RARE: For peaceful contact, one must bind weapons rightly in cloth and offer an adequate gift. Once given hospitality, visitors are completely safe so long as they do not threaten or steal from members of a shard.

OBSCURE: Attus Kranze, a Khadoran explorer, once told of a winter stone that sat in the heights of a glacier. Attus made camp there and dreamt of a massive shape under the ice that slept but did not sleep. He went mad months later, claiming that this shape watched him in his dreams.

Treasure

Given their rarity, Nyss crafted items are of value to collectors, particularly if inscribed with Aeric runes. The most valued are the great two-handed claymores, which are rumored to never lose their edge nor suffer the effects of time. All claymores are masterwork and can fetch upwards of 1,000 gp or more depending on ornamentation. Nyss claymores require Exotic Weapon Proficiency to use, having an entirely different balance from regular greatswords.

Nyss Characters

For information on Nyss as player characters, consult the playable race appendix (pp. 236).
Oasis Ooze

Large Ooze

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hit Dice:</th>
<th>6d10+27 (60 hp)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Initiative:</td>
<td>-5 (-5 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed:</td>
<td>10 ft., swim 10 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC:</td>
<td>4 (-1 size, -5 Dex)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks:</td>
<td>Slam +8 melee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage:</td>
<td>Slam 2d4+5 and 1d6 acid</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach:</td>
<td>5 ft. by 10 ft / 10 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks:</td>
<td>Improved grab, acid, constrict 2d4+5, acid 1d6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities:</td>
<td>Blindsight, ooze, suspended animation, transparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves:</td>
<td>Fort +4, Ref -3, Will -3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities:</td>
<td>Str 20, Dex 1, Con 15, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Climate/Terrain:</td>
<td>Any desert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Organization:</td>
<td>Solitary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Challenge Rating:</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alignment:</td>
<td>Always neutral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advancement:</td>
<td>7–10 HD (Large); 11–20 HD (Huge)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Oasis oozes make their home in the scattered oases of the Bloodstone Marches. Even a trained eye can hardly see these creatures lurking just below the water’s surface.

From wandering travelers to sand beasts, the oasis ooze fearlessly attacks those who dare to drink from its waters. Although not always successful, the oasis ooze is more than able to defend itself and its territory, as I was able to see firsthand upon my first trip to the Bloodstone Marches.

The appearance of an oasis ooze can best be described as an amorphous organism with transparent skin and tendrils. It usually waits until its victim has taken a drink of water from the oasis before attacking. The creature seizes from the water, envelops its prey, and drowns it within the oasis where it is simultaneously strangled and digested.

Organic material (including bone) that is digested by the oasis ooze is dissolved by acidic juices leaving little evidence to reveal its presence. There may however be some non-organic materials that are not digested and instead are expelled from the oasis ooze’s body. Scouring some of these materials within an oasis or around the water’s edge may be an indicator that an oasis ooze is lurking somewhere in the waters.

Oasis oozes and go in the Bloodstone Marches, and the oasis ooze has adapted to these conditions. It is not uncommon to find an oasis ooze in suspended animation, withdrawn into a rocky depression waiting for the next rainfall. As Quiinimt warned me it is unwise to handle them while in this state. The mere touch of water or organic material is enough to revive the oasis ooze from its hibernation. However, one can usually handle the oasis ooze in this state with gauntlets or tongs.

Combat

The oasis ooze strikes its intended victims with a pseudopod, attempting to drag them into the water to be crushed and drowned.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the oasis ooze must hit with its slam attack. If it gets a hold it can constrict.

Acid (Ex): Oasis oozes secrete a digestive acid that dissolves organic material. Any melee hit deals acid damage (1d6). The acid does not harm metal or stone.

Constrict (Ex): Oasis oozes deal automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check.

Blindsight (Ex): An oasis ooze’s entire body is a primitive sensory organ that can ascertain prey by scent and vibration within 60 feet.
Suspended Animation (Ex): If the oasis ooze has no access to water for a day or food for a month it begins to enter suspended animation in order to conserve energy. For each week that passes the oasis ooze loses 1/10th of its original size (to a minimum of 1/10th) and one temporary Strength point. While in suspended animation the oasis ooze retreats into a crystalline shell, however as soon as water or any organic material comes into contact with the shell, the oasis ooze emerges. Thereafter, the ooze gains 1/10th of its original size and one Strength point back each round until returning to full size. While returning to full size the oasis ooze may only make partial actions.

Transparent (Ex): It takes a successful Spot check (DC 15) to notice a submerged oasis ooze.

Treasure

All manner of adventuring gear might be found inside an oasis ooze or along the edges of its pool. These items will always be restricted to non-organic materials, however.

Oasis oozes are worth quite a bit on the Iron Kingdoms industrial markets. Their worth ranges from 200 gp (for the smallest specimens) to 2,000 gp (for the largest and most dangerous specimens). The oasis oozes if hooked up to the proper devices can be milked for their digestive acids. The milking process is a constant procedure of introducing food into the creature and then draining the digestive juices produced to breakdown the material. The smaller specimens produce up to two flasks of acid each day, while the largest specimens have been known to produce about ten flasks of acid a day. The acid produced in this fashion sells for about 8 gp per flask and has many uses in industries such as printing, manufacturing, and alchemy.

Hooks

A collector of oddities desires an oasis ooze for his collection and is willing to pay well for it. If the PCs accept the collector's offer, they begin the trip with the collector, his wife, his daughters, his sons, and a few selected guests. Alternatively, a factory owner may wish to recover his own beast so as to avoid the steep fees he is currently paying for industrial acids on the open market.
Ogrun

Large Giant (Ogrun)
Hit Dice: 2d8 (9 hp)
Initiative: +4 ( Improved Initiative)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 11 (—1 size, +2 natural); or by armor type Attacks: Halberd +1 melee, or heavy crossebow -1 ranged Damage: Halberd 1d10+2, or heavy crossebow 1d10
Face / Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 10 ft.
 Saves: Fort +2, Ref +0, Will -1
Abilities: Str 15, Dex 11, Con 11,

Skills: Int 9, Wis 9, Cha 10
Feats: Intimidate +5, Jump +5

Climate / Terrain: Any mountains
Organization: Korune gang (2—12), extended family (5—30), conclave (10—100), town (200—1,000)

Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Usually chaotic good or chaotic evil
Advancement: By character class

Ever since my cruel enslavement in the mines of the so-called "black orgrun" I have wondered how any species related to them could be so trusted by the dwarves of Rhul. It also puzzled me that there are orgrun in the service of Lord Toruk, dragon tyrant of Cryx; it is hard to imagine two more dissimilar cultures. This was a mystery I felt driven to solve.

There are several orgrun towns in Rhul with well-traveled roads connecting to the dwarf cities and outposts. The orgrun are not as skilled in stonework as their neighbors, but in some cases have borrowed for construction contrivances. To my eyes their homes are well-built, each extended family sharing a single sizeable keep. They settle in groups of multiple families, called conclaves, with towns numbering a thousand orgrun at most. Patrol duties are shared among the various korune (a word which translates loosely as "lord" in the Melgrun Og dialect they speak) which preside over the warriors of the community. Becoming a korune is pure a matter of fighting prowess and having earned the loyalty of other orgrun. Once even a single orgrun has sworn fealty to another, that orgrun becomes a korune.

Fights between warriors loyal to different korune are common and arguably more frequent than bloodshed with outsiders. These fights can be deadly and lack the strict rules governing feuds between dwarfen clans. Those korune who amass too many warriors under their leadership are often set upon by lesser rivals, keeping any one leader from gaining too much power.

Ogrun are not yet as common in human society as they are in the dwarfen kingdom; they are a far rarer sight than trollkin or gobbers, but have gained acceptance in certain communities. Ogrun make excellent laborers due to their size and strength, but also face prejudices by those who view them as primitive and dangerous. They are more likely to be found in Kharad and Cygnar than the other kingdoms, generally settling in mountain communities.

Recognizing an orgrun is quite easy, as they look like no other civilized species, standing at least 8 feet in height. Sometimes 9, with long arms, strong hands, and muscular bodies always ready for a fight. Ogrun live reasonably long life spans, almost as long as humans on average, with most living at least to their mid 70s and some rare few as long as 90 years.

Most orgrun worship the same primitive mother-goddess as many trollkin and gobbers—an entity named Dlima— and believe their souls are reborn when they die. The ogrun have taken the concept of reincarnation to another level; they believe honor (or lack thereof) in one life influences the next, and their ancestors pay the consequences. To an ogrun the greatest possible dishonor is breaking a sworn allegiance to their korune. However, ogrun are individually highly independent, and it is rare for more than a few dozen to unite under a single lord.

Once ogrun have sworn oaths to a korune, they serve with absolute devotion, and their unwavering loyalty is the most striking aspect of their culture. Furthermore, so long as a lord lives, their progeny are expected to follow the same leader. The system is complex, as a lesser korune may be sworn to an even more powerful one, yet his subordinates are only loyal to their immediate lord. In the event of their korune’s death they are freed of all obligations. They may indeed seek revenge on their lord’s lord if they believe him responsible.

The dwarves of Rhul have benefited from this ancestral loyalty. Many centuries ago many tribes of ogrun swore oaths—not to specific dwarven lords—but to entire clans. This was done when the dwarves of Rhul saved countless ogrun in a time of famine. Consequently, there are entire tribes of ogrun who consider themselves beholden to specific dwarven clans and periodically loan able warriors (called an oathi-thite) to dwarven service.

This has been extended to amicable trade and mutual protection between the two species. Some ogrun in other kingdoms resent this relationship, but the situation appears to have worked to the benefit of both ogrun and dwarves in Rhul. Ogrun have proven more than able warriors as they have worked side by side with dwarven engineers on constructing tracks and steam engines for rail travel as well as having a knack for fabricating exceptionally precise cannons. In time their reputation as smiths may exceed even that of the dwarves themselves.

I have not investigated the ogrun of Cryx, but I presume they are bound to Lord Toruk by similar ancient promises—Lord Toruk is not only their korune, but also their god. These ogrun have become as vicious and bloodthirsty as their master, and are by all accounts evil to the core. Yet they too demonstrate the same intense loyalty and devotion. The words for betrayal and death are nearly identical in the dialect of these psuedo-people.

Combat

Ogrun are surprisingly fast and nimble despite their size, a fact they use to their advantage. They are known for split second decisions and quick reflexes. Each ogrun fights individually, yet they work together reasonably well when facing adversaries.

They are fond of halberds and other polearms, which they can wield in one hand due to their size, sometimes equipping a large shield in the other. Being well-honed warriors, they will always take advantage of the special qualities of their weapons, including setting for a charge, hooking to trip opponents, etc. Their favored ranged weapon is the heavy crossbow, sometimes fired in one hand (–4 penalty to hit).

Ogrun who can afford the expense will wear breastplate or chainmail, while others will wear studded leather. Armor is usually decorated with the sigil of the korune or dwarven clan they serve.

Ogrun Traits: All ogrun benefit from a number of shared racial traits.

+2 natural bonus to AC, as their skin is as tough as leather.

+2 racial bonus to Intimidate checks and +2 racial bonus to any Craft checks involving working metal.

Once an ogrun swears fealty to a leader or a cause, they are virtually incapable of betraying those oaths (with similar penalties as lesser tieflings if they do). They can choose to disobey specific orders but in all other ways must act in the best interest of the sworn leader or cause.

Treasure

Ogrun are exceptional smiths and are known for high quality weapons as well as armor. Their armors will be too large for even the largest humans to utilize, but their polearms are sometimes masterwork quality. Although they prefer barter and do not mint their own coin, ogrun often keep cofferage of the kingdom they call home, either dwarven or human.

Ogrun Characters

For more on ogrun player characters, consult the playable races appendix (pp. 230).
Old Man of the Swamp

Medium-size Fey (Grymlkin)

Hit Dice: 5d6+10 (31 hp)
Initiative: +7 (+3 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 15 (+3 Dex, +2 natural)
Attacks: Touch +2 melee; or cudgel +4 melee
Damage: Touch 1d8; cudgel 1d6+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Drainling touch, spell-like abilities
Special Qualities: Damage reduction 10/+2, SR 15, swamp magnetism, rejuvenation

Simeon Slimewort, the Mud King, Old Gray Dick—whatever you call the Old Man of the Swamp, just hope you never cross his path. My colleague, the renowned entomologist Professor Golliber Humm, is the only person I know to claim an encounter with the wicked old geezer of children’s stories and survive to tell the tale. Whether or not he imagined it, I must admit poor Humm was never quite the same when he returned three days overdue from that trip into the marsh.

According to Professor Humm, the Old Man of the Swamp is very real indeed, a stooped old man with a kindly face, leaning on a gnarled cane. Meeting by chance in the depths of the swamp, the Old Man claimed to be nothing more than a harried eking out a pitiful existence. He offered to help the professor locate a rather rare specimen of the lesser triple-winged lantern moth, “just a ways into the swamp.”

When they reached the location, there was no triple-winged lantern moth to be seen. That is, until the Old Man reached with uncanny quickness into a nearby bush, producing a specimen perfect in all respects. Humm, overjoyed, reached for the creature, and the Old Man nonchalantly brushed hands with him. An odd sensation of weakness passed over him (he attributed it to sheer delight at finding his moth), but he was too overcome with his rare find to give it much thought.

The Old Man offered his hand in congratulation, which the scholar shook with great delight. It was only then he felt a shooting pain run up his arm. Yelping, he summoned his nearby man-at-arms, who charged the Old Man with drawn sword. The Old Man spat a curse at Humm and vanished into the mists of the swamp. Terrified, Humm and his protector quickly sought the safety of a nearby village.

Legends about the Old Man abound, particularly in northern Cygnar. There are even those who claim to have seen him slain, nevertheless, the sightings continue to this day.

Combat

The Old Man of the Swamp attempts to bluff unsuspecting individuals into receiving through trade or any other means an object of value, often a worthless handful of gravel upon which he casts silent image. He then attempts a touch attack. The victim does not notice unless a successful Will save (DC 14) is made. He is also capable of attacking with his cudgel (a +2 dub), but prefers to cast fog cloud and slip into the mists and escape. If cornered, he will call 1d4 swamp shamblers to his aid.
Old Man of the Swamp

Draining Touch (Su): A successful touch attack deals 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage. On a successful critical hit, the Old Man’s touch also inflicts one negative level upon the victim. The Fortitude save to remove this is at DC 16.

Swamp Magnetism (Su): Once per day, the Old Man can summon 1d4 swamp shamblers who will respond to him as if affected by a charm monster spell.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—comprehend languages, fog cloud, mirror image, silent image; 3/day—gaseous form. These abilities are as the spells cast by a 10th-level sorcerer (save DC 14 + spell level).

Rejuvenation (Su): If killed, the Old Man will reappear in the swamp within 1d8 months.

who once taxed his subjects into starvation. If his resting place could be found and sanctified, the curse of the Old Man could be lifted forever.

Hooks

- Legend has it that the Old Man has amassed a fabulous treasure over the centuries, hidden in a secret tree stump lair of items stolen from his victims. Rumors persist that the legend is just a hoax, that the “Old Man” is really a local bandit and his entourage. But one ancient crone thinks otherwise, and she claims to know where he is now: best to hurry, for the Old Man always moves on after a few moons at the most.

- A teenage girl, the daughter of Watchman Mitchel Felkins is missing; the city watch is convinced she was kidnapped by the Old Man while gathering berries in the forest. A reward for her return is offered.

Treasure

The Old Man’s cudgel is a +2 dub. It will begin to dry-rot once removed from his possession, becoming useless in 1d4 days unless mummified is cast upon it. After the club disintegrates it will reappear in his possession—or another like it, if it is preserved. He will also have on his person 1d6 gems worth between 200 gp and 500 gp each. In his hoard (located in a rotting tree stump) will be found 2d10 gems valued between 200 gp and 1,000 gp. He will never venture farther away than one mile from the stump, though he will choose a new location for his hoard every few weeks or months. Over the years he has visited a great deal of the Iron Kingdoms.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The Old Man of the Swamp is some kind of supernatural being with a deadly touch and a huge stash of treasure.

UNCOMMON: Swamp shamblers seem drawn to the Old Man, and he can control them.

RARE: The Old Man can be defeated, though his body will vanish, and he will reappear in the swamp within the year.

OBSCURE: The Old Man is the spirit of a miserly old baron Onkar

Medium-size Aberration

Hit Dice: 2d8+5 (14 hp)
Initiative: -1 (-1 Dex)
Speed: 20 ft., burrow 10 ft.
AC: 17 (-1 Dex, +8 natural)
Attacks: Bite +4 melee
Damage: Bite 2d6+4
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Qualities: Blindsight, ore eater, ore seeker, scent

Saves: Fort +5, Ref -1, Will +3
Abilities: Str 16, Dex 8, Con 20,
Int 2, Wis 11, Cha 6
Skills: Intuit Direction +4
Climate/Terrain: Any underground
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 2
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 3–4 HD (Medium-size)

It was during my visit to Rhul that I happened to bear witness to one of Caen's truly beneficial domestic creatures, the peculiar onkar. A beast of singularly ugly aspect, the onkar is a squat biped standing little nearer than most men, but notably broader. My initial observations, reinforced by numerous accounts from my dwarven hosts, also suggests that the rotund creature is little more than a mobile mouth and stomach, albeit ideally suited to burrowing and devouring metals.

The onkar's thick plated hide is almost white, but is faced with trace elements of the metals the onkar ingests, giving the hide great resiliency and a metallic sheen, protecting the creature from tunneling abrasion. Although the beasts are considered too valuable to kill, dwarves do favor the hide of the onkar in the crafting of boots, gloves, hide armor of remarkable quality, and as decorative rugs in their dwellings.

However, what makes the onkar so valuable to the dwarves of Rhul is its unique ability to detect metals of all varieties, particularly large quantities of ore that the dwarves themselves can exploit. Wild onkars scan on trace elements of metal in soil and the veins of ores they encounter, while domesticated onkars subsist on the metal waste and slag of dwarven productivity, as well as "treats" in the form of the old metal coin.

Excited to a mining operation, I proceeded to learn more about this strange beast, watching as it waddled up to the tunnel wall and unhinged its already cavernous maw to take in any small wood of ore. Its small clawed forelimbs moved surprisingly quickly to pass excess soil and stone along its sides. Within moments, the onkar had tunneled a full 6 feet into the rocky soil wall of the tunnel, eating all the while, as dwarven miners worked quickly behind it to shovel out what can only be described as the creature's excrement, produced from the soil ingested only moments earlier. To my amazement, several dwarves then proceeded to load the excrement into waiting mine carts. When I inquired what they intended to do with the thick, smooth, odorless, mud-like substance, they informed me that the onkar's excrement is in all ways like fine clay, and therefore used as such. Apparently, given a more rocky diet, the onkar's excrement is more akin to a sandy cement and proves very useful in construction work.

Making my way along the onkar's tunnel, I noticed that the creature started to become excited, drooling large puddles of saliva onto the floor, while hopping from foot to foot. Its handler smiled and gave the onkar two handfuls of mixed coins from a pouch at her belt; the creature had uncovered a vein of iron, hence its sudden hunger and excitement; always a sure sign that significant quantities of metal are nearby.
Combat

Despite their exceptional armor and fearsome bite, dwarf-bred onkarasi are not willing combatants, preferring to flee danger if at all possible. Only if cornered and unable to burrow or waddle to safety will an onkar attack anyone, even then fighting only until able to escape. Wild onkarasi, on the other hand, are more territorial and have been known to threaten intruders with displays of huffing and stamping, charging if the intruder fails to retreat. Even so, wild onkarasi are quick to back off in the face of a clearly superior opponent.

Onkar (Ex): Onkarasi have a natural armor bonus equal to half of their Constitution modifier. They also have a +10 natural bonus to their AC against an onkarasi's bite.

Ore Seeker (Ex): Onkarasi are able to “sniff out” large quantities of metal within the air or soil within a number of feet equal to 50 times their Wisdom score.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Onkarasi eat metals, and the dwarves train them to help locate ores and create tunnels.

UNCOMMON: Much of the finest claywork in Rhul is produced using onkarasi dung (“guly” in Rhulic).

RARE: Onkarasi are unable to digest precious stones, and any they accidentally ingest are passed harmlessly. These may be recovered by those willing to do a little “digging.”

OBSCURE: If an onkarasi were fed exclusively on a single metal for over a year, its hide would take on the luster and appearance of that metal, while remaining as easy to work as normal animal hide.

Hooks

Driven mad by sickness, a wild onkarasi has taken to attacking miners, devouring their pick heads, birthing chunks out of metal minecarts, and otherwise causing a nuisance. Unfortunately, the dwarves sent in a squad of heavily armed and armored warriors to deal with the beast, and none have returned. All that metal plate and weaponry...

I don’t care what the dwarves say... I’m not eating off onkarasi-clay plates.
Pistol Wraith

Medium-size Undead (Incorporeal)

Hit Dice: 7d12 (84 hp)
Initiative: +10 (+6 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 20 (+6 Dex, +4 deflection)

Attacks: Pistol +17/+12 ranged Damage: Pistol 2d6+5

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Bullets of the grave, energy drain, lightning draw/reload
Special Qualities: Incorporeal, +7 turn resistance, undead

Saves: Fort +2, Ref +11, Will +2
Abilities: Str 16, Dex 22, Con —, Int 14, Wis 7, Cha 18

Skills: Bluff +7, Craft (small arms) +16, Intimidate +9,
Knowledge (firearms) +12,
Listen +6, Sense Motive +7,
Spot +7

Feats: Dodge, Exotic Weapon

Proficiency (small arms),
Improved Initiative, Point Blank Shot, Quick Draw, Rapid Shot, Shot on the Run, Weapon Focus (small arms), Weapon Specialization (small arms)

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 9
Alignment: Always lawful evil

Advancement: 8—15 HD (Medium-size)

There are many tales across the Iron Kingdoms of restless spirits, however, one of the most compelling is the tale of Lach Bradig. Bradig was a regular in the Cygnaran military, and because of his exceptional skill he had been assigned to a corps of riflemen. Bradig’s troops won many victories, although by circumstance these were all minor skirmishes. This didn’t satisfy Bradig at all. He was a glory hound and, obsessed with his own marksmanship, had to prove his skill to the entire world. Eventually his sense of honor got out of hand, and he was dishonorably discharged from the service.

This only made things worse. Bradig lost himself to anger and plotted to avenge himself by methodically killing every member of his former troops in a marksmanship duel. And this is just what he did. Bradig, a Khadoran by ancestry, enacted a form of duel called “hiltcloth.” This was a ritualized form of archer’s duel that was performed by a small number of isolated tribes in northern Khador in days of old. It was always performed close to midnight on the eve of a full moon in an isolated area. I don’t know how Bradig enticed or (more likely) forced all of his former comrades into such a duel, but he shot down every one of them.

Eventually an unknown gunman killed Bradig, but that wasn’t the end for him. He arose from the grave, a spectral shadow of his former self. He now stalks all of the Iron Kingdoms challenging well-known marksmen to hiltcloth duels.

Those that accept never make it back alive; those that refuse are gunned down as cowards.

What’s worse is that it seems that some of Bradig’s victims have arisen as undead pistol wraiths as well. They too are now stalking the Iron Kingdoms, bringing death to pistoleers and sometimes even other innocents across the land. I’m only glad that my skills with a pistol were never much to speak of, as I’d surely hate to face a mad spirit such as this one.
Pistol Wraith

Combat

Pistol wraiths will always seek opponents out and challenge them to a klobbic-style duel. Those that accept participate in a fairly traditional duel, despite the unusual setting. The wraiths attempt to use their lightning draw ability to shoot their opponent down quickly. If they miss they will keep reloading as per lightning reload until they shoot them dead. Those who refuse to duel are typically gunned down in a public place. Do note that on rare occasions pistol wraiths have been known to target other seemingly innocent victims as well, though the reasons are unknown; regardless, all are still challenged to enter a duel.

Bullets of the Grave (Su): Although incorporeal entities, the bullets that pistol wraiths fire become real once discharged (though magical with a +3 bonus). Additionally, the weapon that fires these bullets is considered to be a +3 military pistol of wounding. The powder and ammunition supply is endless, though the wraith must still load the pistol regularly. These items are a part of the pistol wraith's being and may not be removed from him by any means.

Energy Drain (Su): Living beings struck by one of a pistol wraith's bullets suffer one negative level. A Fortitude save (DC 17) removes this. Those who are killed by this attack while fleeing rise as pistol wraiths themselves; those killed while standing their ground and following through with the duel are spared the pain of a quick death.

Lightning Draw/Reload (Ex): *A pistol wraith is so skilled in the art of the duel that he may draw and fire his pistol as if he had taken a free action without spending the preceding round assessing the combat situation, as is normally required (thus his initiative is effectively +0). Furthermore, it only takes one a move-equivalent action to reload.

Treasure

A pistol wraith carries no treasure. However, any bullet fired by a wraith remains in perfect condition and may be reused by another marksman as a normal bullet (powder and such still required). The bullets bear a +3 enchantment to damage; they also add one extra damage die and increase the critical multiplier by one. Ammunition with that power would be quite valuable, although most marksmen wouldn't dare tempt fate by using such a potentially cursed object.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Those who fancy themselves to be deadly pistolers may be sought out by a restless spirit. A number of them stalk the land, challenging skilled marksmen to ill-fated duels.

UNCOMMON: There are a number of restless pistol wraiths, but the original was a gunman named Lach Bradig. Some of those he slays become spirits themselves, though Bradig is the most powerful of his kind.

RARE: Those who accept these duels seldom live; yet those who refuse are gunned down as well. What's more, those who flee are cursed to rise up as a pistol wraith as well.

OBSCURE: The man who shot Bradig down was none other than Corvis's Julian Helstrom, and Bradig is intensely afraid of him. Those aware of this speculate that only a bullet from Helstrom's pistol will put Bradig to rest for good. What happens to the rest of the pistol wraiths after Bradig dies is anyone's guess.

Hooks

A young promising regular in the Cygnar military has just received his third award for excellent marksmanship... and Lach Bradig has also just challenged him to a duel. The regular believes that if he can obtain a charm that will protect him from the walking dead and wear it until the next full moon, Bradig will leave him alone. Unfortunately, he needs some help finding such a charm.
Raevhan Buffalo

Huge Animal

Hit Dice: 9d8+45 (86 hp)
Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 15 (-2 size, +1 Dex, +6 natural)
Attacks: Butt +10 melee; or 2 stomps
Damage: Butt 2d6+6; or stomp 1d6+6
Face/Reach: 15 ft. by 15 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Rage, trample
Special Qualities: Scent, stealth

Saves: Fort +11, Ref +7, Will +0
Abilities: Str 23, Dex 13, Con 20,
Int 2, Wis 10, Cha 4
Skills: Move Silently +12, Listen +5,
Hide +4*

Climate/Terrain: Forests and temperate plains
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 6
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 9–12 HD (Huge)

On the occasional junk hauls my father dragged me on as a boy across the forests and plains of Khador, I learned of one of the most aggressive animals in all the Iron Kingdoms—the temperamental Raevhan buffalo. They are named for a lake that is a central migratory area during their mating season, but those placid waters don't reflect the nature of these beasts at all. Under normal circumstances these buffalo are docile and rather calm. However, when one crosses into their area they will defend it relentlessly.

The most intimidating factor, aside from their fury, is their sheer size. They can easily grow to 20 feet at the shoulders, and their antlers are enormous; their broad shape makes them great for butting opponents, digging, and masking trees. In battle they are massive and rather boast. Despite this size, however, they can be amazingly stealthy and will stalk trespassers before charging them. They are more common in forests, but they have made territories for themselves on the Khadoran plains too (where, thankfully, they can't put their stealth to much use).

Using techniques of the Andulhar, one of several small and quickly disappearing native Khadoran hunter-gatherer families, I was able to mask my scent and venture into one of these creature's territories to observe it. Despite their fury they are grazing and foraging animals, and they seem to greatly enjoy dust baths in the huge burrows they dig with their antlers. They are solitary creatures, marking off a personal territory and keeping it to themselves. The only time I know them to venture beyond their boundaries is during the mating season, in which they seem to migrate to seasonal mating grounds, though in small numbers.

Combat

Raevhan buffalo are usually rather docile creatures, but they are extremely territorial. When any creature enters its territory, it becomes enraged and chases after the trespasser violently until they are killed or run off, although it quite frequently continues pursuing opponents well beyond its domain. It is known to stalk trespassers and then ambush them, although once it rages all stealth is forsaken. It will usually open with a charge attack.

Rage (Ex): Any creature that attacks a Raevhan buffalo while inside its territorial area causes it to go into a berserk rage that ends in the death of one or the other; additionally, however, there is a 50% chance that the buffalo will rage at even the mere sight/scent of an intruder in its domain. There is a 75% chance a raging buffalo will continue to pursue opponents well beyond its territory. The buffalo gains +4 Str, +4 Con, and -2 AC during the rage.

Stealth (Ex): The Raevhan buffalo can be surprisingly quiet for its size; they receive a +6 racial bonus to Move Silently checks. Additionally, they gain a +6 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in dense forest.

Trample (Ex): The Raevhan buffalo can trample Medium-size or smaller opponents for 2d8+9 points of damage. Victims who fail to make an attack of opportunity may make a Reflex save (DC 21) for half damage.

Trees with their antlers, rubbing their musk all over them in the process. These trees are a surefire way of knowing a buffalo is nearby.

RARE: These buffalo are actually inactive during the mid part of the day, and one has a good chance of sneaking by their territory during that time.

OBSCURE: Raevhan buffalo are unusually tolerant of the Khadoran burrow rat (not a true rat, mind you), and one may disguise their scent with the musk of these creatures to pass through a buffalo's territory unharmed.

Treasure

The Raevhan buffalo keeps no treasure of its own. Although they are difficult to hunt, the rare and disappearing Khadoran plains people have made a science of it, and the bounty the beast provides can feed a family for weeks. Their antlers make excellent material for tools and weapons. It has a hardness of 6 with 12 hp per inch of thickness, and it grants a +2 circumstance bonus to all Craft checks made to work it. A raw antler would sell for as much as 100–200 gp, while materials crafted of it might sell for 10–15% greater than market value; the more artistically crafted items of the native peoples can sell for much more.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Raevhan buffalo are extremely territorial and temperamental creatures that attack anything that enters their area.

UNCOMMON: They mark off their areas by digging runs into Rusalka

Known as rusalka, or occasionally as "bog nymphs," these malicious creatures make the marshes of the Iron Kingdoms (especially those of Khador) their home. They are said to be the spirits of young women or girls who have succumbed to the hazards of the swamps. I, however, have found them to be less lost souls and more malign spirits.

The rusalka's natural appearance is quite grotesque—a warped and cruel visage sitting atop the shapely body of a woman. They rarely appear in their natural state, however, and often take upon themselves the guise of a beautiful lass, using glamour to appear as a member of whatever race suits their purpose.

Able to change the very appearance of a landscape, the rusalka weaves her powerful illusions like a spider spins her webs. She can make a road look like a wilderness and a wilderness look like a road. She can make a pool of quicksand appear as a peaceful glade to catch the unsuspecting. A glamour that once cost her a drider and an entire crest of priceless Or goth treas-

Not a few have perished by this pitiful creature's deceptions, but a rusalka has more than just her glamour to kill you with. Her dagger, the one, drips poison, and her unsettling laughter can stagger even the sturdiest of men.

While traveling the bogs and marshes of the Iron Kingdoms, be wary of anything that seems out of sorts, lest you find yourself at the mercy of a rusalka.

Combat

Rusalkas avoid combat whenever possible, only entering into it to protect themselves or their dens. They use their unearthly laughter to stun opponents—either to gain time to get away, strike with their dagger, or both.

Unearthly Laughter (Su):

Once per day, the rusalka can emit an unearthly laughter that causes all who are within 30 feet to make a Will save (DC 12) or become stunned for 1d4+2 rounds. Note that the subject must be able to hear the unearthly laughter in order to be affected by it.

Spell-like Abilities

At will—change self, 1/day—balsamary terrain. These abilities are as the spells cast by a 10th-level sorcerer (save DC 12 + spell level).

Treasure

Rusalka Blade: A rusalka blade is an enchanted +1 dagger that drips with magically produced venom. Each blade is bounded to a particular rusalka (storing her soul if she is slain) and will not work for anyone else, instead acting and appearing as an ordinary dagger, though a detect magic spell will indicate that it is magical in nature. Any female humanoid touching the dagger must make a Will save (DC 17, 19 for those who have been possessed before) or be affected by a magic jar spell as cast by a 10th-level sorcerer; the dagger is the receptacle for this spell. If the attack succeeds, then the soul of the rusalka takes over the victim’s body and the dagger regains its magical properties until such time as the victim regains control or is slain, whereupon the rusalka’s soul returns to its place inside the blade. A female humanoid that successfully saves is immune to the attacks of the rusalka blade for a year and a day.

In order to return to her true form the creature must return to the place where she was “born” (which may or may not be where the rusalka was slain) and drown the victim. Once dead, the woman’s body splits open and the rusalka is reborn. Destroying the blade before the rusalka is reborn restores the woman’s soul to her body and destroys the creature.

The dagger is usually made out of antler or bone and its poison deals 1d6 initial and secondary temporary Constitution damage. Each instance of damage can be negated by a successful Fortitude save (DC 12). This ability is limited to 3 times per day.

A rusalka blade is a rarity in the open market due to its malicious nature and the limitations of its magical power. A collector of oddities may be willing to purchase one for as much as 75,000 gp.

Hooks

A gentleman’s daughter has gone missing, and the PCs are requested to help in the search for her. They are asked to return with her or at least with news of her. Of course what the PCs don’t know is that the lady in question has been taken over by the soul of a rusalka and is heading toward her “birthplace.” Can the PCs save the gentleman’s daughter from the fate that awaits her? Are they already too late?
Saqu

- Class: Large Animal
- Hit Dice: 5d8+15 (37 hp)
- Initiative: +1 (Dec)
- Speed: 30 ft., fly 60 ft. (average)
- AC: 14 (−1 size, +1 Dec, +4 natural)
- Attacks: Bite +6 melee, 2 claws +4 melee
- Damage: Bite 2d6+4, claw 2d8+2
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
- Special Attacks: Ravage
- Saves: Fort +7, Ref +5, Will +3
- Abilities: Str 18, Dex 13, Con 16
- Skills: Listen +9, Spot +9
- Feats: Multiattack
- Climate/Terrain: Temperate mountains, hill, and plains
- Organization: Solitary or pair
- Challenge Rating: 4
- Alignment: Always neutral
- Advancement: 6–8 HD (Large); 9–15 HD (Huge)

Although I’ve not yet had the opportunity to study one in great detail, I believe the saqu to be a rather large member of the raptor family of birds. Standing some fifteen feet tall, these semi-flightless avians eat anything smaller than them that they can catch. Usually this is limited to wild hoofed animals if the birds are ranging in the plains or large rock lizards if they are ranging in mountainous areas. If a saqu should chance upon some detectable humanoid wandering in its territory, then it will certainly take the opportunity to add some variety to its diet.

Saqu stand roughly three times taller than a man and are bilateral in their coloration. Their dorsal side is dark gray in color, and the ventral is a whitish tan. The lightly colored underside is no doubt an adaptation that helps to confuse their prey as it allows the bird to blend in with the sky overhead as it swoops down upon its quarry. The bird’s head is topped by a crest of feathers that stand erect when the bird is in a state of excitement, be it courtship or hunting an over-inquisitive scholar who wants nothing more than to study the magnificent beast.

The saqu probably mate for life as many birds do. Though I’ve never seen a juvenile saqu, much less a nest, I believe they nest on high rock ledges or similarly well-hidden locales. They probably lay clutches of 2–3 eggs in a large nest composed of feathers and branches.

Combat

Saqu are not taken to soaring as many birds of prey do; they instead perch on high cliffs faces or hide amongst tall foliage while looking for prey. They then swoop down upon their prey, pinning it to the ground while they snap at it with their powerful beak. Often this will stun or kill the prey immediately.

They will also dash their stunned prey against large rocks or fling it several yards to further injure it.

Ravage (Ex): A saqu that hits with a claw attack against a creature of Medium-size or less may attempt a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opporhumans—is in for a real find. There will undoubtedly be discovered all manner of small, human wrought objects which have fallen deep into the large branches that make up the nest.

Hooks

- The PCs are part of a caravan traveling though some grasslands bordered by an imposing mountain range. As they pass particularly close to the range, a male saqu swoops down and snatches a member of the caravan, possibly a PC. It’s a race against time now, as the PCs must hurry to their comrade’s aid before the saqu’s mate or hatchlings devour him.
- A rich but eccentric Llaelie merchant is in the market for living saqu eggs. He’s paying well, but no one is sure just what he’s up to. In reality, the mad merchant plans on raising saqu on farms to harvest their meat and feathers. The entrepreneur will meet an untimely (and somewhat amusing) demise a few months later while trying to ride a “tame” saqu, and the PCs may be called on to help deal with a farm full of angry giant birds.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Saqu are essentially enormous, semi-flightless hawks.

UNCOMMON: Saqu are not necessarily man-eaters; they’re just not very particular.

RARE: Saqu are sometimes drawn to shiny objects.

OBSCURE: A significant part of the saqu mating ritual is the presentation of impressive food by the male to the female. This coupled with their fondness for shiny objects spells bad news for adventurers in metal armor. Time to cover up that chainmail!

Treasure

There are many parts of the saqu that may fetch a fair price in the market. Their tail feathers, while not fanciful, are enormous in size and can be made into great fans or dyed and fashioned into all manner of decorations. Their sharp talons can be made into a crude spear if lashed to a pole. As many carnivorous birds do, saqu regurgitate indigestible portions of their food in the form of compact, oblong pellets. These pellets often contain small items of interest if the saqu has partaken of any humans in their diet. Anyone lucky enough to locate a saqu nest—particularly from a pair that has taken to eating
Satyxis

Medium-size Humanoid (Satyxis)

Hit Dice: 1d8+1 (5 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 15 (+2 Dex, +3 studded leather)
Attacks: Longsword +1 melee
Damage: Longsword 1d8+1
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Headbutt
Special Qualities: Darkvision 30 ft., beguile
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +4, Will +0
Abilities: Str 13, Dex 14, Con 12,
           Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 14
Skills: Bluff +3, Gather Information
Feats: +4, Immune +1, Intimidate
       +3, Jump +2
Power Attack
Climate/Terrain: Warm land or warm seas
Organization: Solitary (Chosen of Tork)
              10th-level—, cohort (1d6 human pirates and one 2nd-level Satyxis), raid (2 cohorts and one 4th-level Satyxis), crew (3 raids and one 8th-level Satyxis)
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Usually neutral evil
Advancement: By character class

The Satyxis are an ancient warrior race. Once famous for their honorable traditions and prowess in battle,
they led a life of conflict and heroism. As it happens, a fight between Tork and the dragon
Shazkz devastated the homeland of the Satyxis centuries ago. Dragon fire and spilled dragon blood tainted the land and ultimately the Satyxis bloodline as well. The women survived somehow, but the men
were rendered monstrous and deformed.
Over the ages this dragon-blight has crept
further into their blood, making the women
strong and the men now non-existent.

After the blight took hold,
Satyxis women learned it was best to mate exclusively outside of their own bloodline. Myth and record show that they often choose to seduce their most capable opponents (traditionally known as chosen) into fathering their children. Once with child, the Satyxis mother leaves the chosen male and retreats to her homeland to give birth. Daughters are treated as her face as clearly as if the battle happened yesterday. I have never seen anything more beautiful and terrifying.

whistling blades, pistol shots, and the booming canons rang around my ears the first time
I engaged a Satyxis battle-witch. pirates had boated our ship, and a fierce woman of unearthly beauty was leading the raid. Despite the thunder and racket, her presence was stuning. Her stance was that of a master, her blade moving with lightning speed. Her lithe form and perfect beauty were marred only by the horns that protruded from her brow.

As she kicked a Cognac marine off the length of her sword, our eyes met. In that moment, amongst the smell of spent gun charges and coppery blood, I felt absolutely lost in her gaze. She seemed to ignore the battle around her and came at me, her weapon poised to end my life. I defended myself with any of my skill, though I could not take my eyes off her.

Luckily, a steam frigate from Nacer interrupted the raid with a blast of grapeshot. The last I saw of the Satyxis was her seven feet flowing behind her as she leaped to the deck of her own ship. I still remember her face as clearly as if the battle happened yesterday. I have never seen anything more beautiful and terrifying.

The Satyxis are an ancient warrior race. Once famous for their honorable traditions and prowess in battle,
they led a life of conflict and heroism. As it happens, a fight between Tork and the dragon
Shazkz devastated the homeland of the Satyxis
centuries ago. Dragon fire and spilled dragon blood tainted the land and ultimately the Satyxis bloodline as well. The women survived somehow, but the men
were rendered monstrous and deformed.
Over the ages this dragon-blight has crept
further into their blood, making the women
strong and the men now non-existent.

After the blight took hold,
Satyxis women learned it was best
to mate exclusively outside of their own bloodline. Myth and record show that they often choose to seduce their
most capable opponents (traditionally known as chosen) into fathering their children. Once with child, the Satyxis mother leaves the chosen male and retreats to her homeland to give birth. Daughters are treated as warriors with a birthright—the sons are brutally sacrificed.

Today, the Satyxis homeland is lost, though it is thought to be close to Cryx. In the modern day, the women the Orgoth called “reaver witches” are well known on that dark isle and the surrounding waters. Select daughters are chosen by Toruk to serve his will as assassins or worse. Pirate crews also value the Satyxis as elite officers—Axiana Wraithblade is perhaps the most infamous and reviled up and down the Broken Coast.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The Satyxis are a race of warrior women found near the Shattered Coast between Cygnar and Cryx.

UNCOMMON: Beware what sailors call the “Satyxis kiss”—it is a savage headbutt.

RARE: The Satyxis dwell on a hidden isle in the waters between Cygnar and Cryx. This isle is a dangerous jungle, filled with treacherous creatures. In the center is the city of Satyxs.

OBSCURE: Satyxis males are sacrificed to keep the bloodline strong. Should a chosen man father a Satyxis son, he must also be found and sacrificed. This is done in a rite to further strengthen the Satyxis bloodline.

Combat

The Satyxis are imbued with an unnatural grace, and most are highly skilled in swordplay. If during a battle a Satyxis discovers her chosen, she engages him in a ritual battle. This sword dance tests the skill of the man, and should he have the mettle, she will beguile him with her charms and take him as loot.

Headbutt (15): A common trick used to deadly effect is to pull a man close enough to make him think he will receive a kiss. This cunningploy lures a man into a painful reward. A satyxis headbutt that does maximum damage dazes the opponent. A Fortitude save (DC 12) is required or the subject is dazed and loses one round of actions.

Beguile (Su): The feminine beauty of the Satyxis can entrance male opponents. Once per day a Satyxis can affect a single man as if using hypnotism. The spell is maximized, as per the Maximize Spell feat, and it is cast at the effective level of the Satyxis. Subjects with more than 8 hit dice cannot be affected by this ability. Females are immune.

Treasure

Satyxis that have mated with a chosen often leave valued trinkets or gold as a reward for the services of their chosen. There is a 10% per level (of the chosen) chance that the item left behind will be magical. These gifts are often carefully selected and usually pertinent to the class of the chosen.

Hooks

A man contacts the players claiming to know the location of the Isle of Satyxs. The man does in fact know where the island is—he has spent a year trying to find the woman who beguiled him and left him heartbroken. He wishes to find her and their daughter. Of course, he doesn’t have to let the party know that.
Screecher

Tiny Beast

| Hit Dice:  | 1d10-1 (4 hp) |
| Initiative: | +4 (+4 Dex) |
| Speed:     | 40 ft. |
| AC:        | 18 (+2 str, +4 Dex, +2 natural) |
| Attacks:   | Bite +1 melee, 2 claws -4 melee |
| Damage:    | Bite 1d4-1, claw 1d2-1 |
| Face/Reach:| 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft. |
| Special Attacks: | Sonic shriek |

Saves: | Fort +1, Ref +6, Will +0 |
Abilities: | Str 8, Dex 19, Con 8, Int 4, Wis 11, Cha 4 |
Skills: | Hide +11, Move Silently +12 |
Climate/Terrain: | Any forest |
Organization: | Pack (5–20) |
Challenge Rating: | 2 |
Alignment: | Always chaotic neutral |
Advancement: | 2 HD (Tiny); 3–4 HD (Small) |

Nothing could lead a more bizarre existence than the screecher, a small carnivorous quadruped inhabiting the forests of Cygnar and Khador. They can be recognized by their flatish, wedge-shaped heads, widely spaced eyes, two-clawed feet, and short, stubby tails, and there couldn’t be a more irritating beastie to be found in the wilds.

Screechers spend their day tracking larger animals—not to mention unsuspecting explorers innocently going about their business—through the bush. The nasty little monsters are silent as the grave as they creep about behind their prey. They wait until the victim stops for a quiet moment, perhaps to sleep or graze (or to rest upon a log in a scenic sunny spot to light one’s pipe). Then the vicious little vermin, having crept close by their prey, emit such a furious shriek as to terrify the victim half out of his wits.

I have observed the horrid screechers stun much larger animals with the blast, then attack in a pack, tearing it to bits with their claws and fangs.

They may not sound much of a threat to a well armed group, but I warn you that the effect of a fright in the woods can be devastating. My venerable friend and guide of many years, Tumalok (Morrow favor his soul), had slain many a daunting foe in his career. But poor Tumalok had stopped to, er, relieve himself in the woods—had his need not been so great and his bladder so old he might have paid heed to the pack on his trail. Alas, the old tracker’s heart could not withstand the shock of being so rudely surprised.

The only thing of value that they possess is the lung-like organ they use to produce the harmful blast. The large sac found in the creature’s thorax is prized for its use in creating Llaelense bagpipes and foghorns on great steamships (little difference there, I might add.) One in good condition can be sold to the right buyer, usually in a port town.

Combat

Screechers follow their prey through the forest, hiding in the thick undergrowth and moving silently, often hunting in... coordinated packs. When the victim is unaware or its attention occupied elsewhere, the screecher emits a high-volume shriek designed to stun or even kill weaker opponents. A stunned opponent is then attacked by the screecher or pack and devoured.

Sonic Shriek (Ex): The screecher can emit a sonic shriek twice per day loud enough to stun opponents who fail their Fortitude save (DC 12) for 1d4 rounds. Those with Constitution of 12 or less who fail a saving throw must save again at -4 (DC 16) or become unconscious for 1d4 rounds. Those with a Constitution of 6 or less must make a third saving throw at +4 (DC 8) or die instantly of heart failure. Opponents who are aware of the screecher receive a +8 bonus to each saving throw. Creatures with no living metabolism are immune to the effect.

Treasure

Screechers carry no treasure. The air sacs with which they generate a blast of air are worth between 25 and 100 gp—usually more if they are sold in a port town where boat horns or sirens are in higher demand. Killing a screecher with a piercing or slashing weapon will destroy the air sac 75% of the time.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Screechers are frightening creatures that stun prey by shrieking; they can be found in many forests.

UNCOMMON: Screechers travel in packs, and they will always attempt to surprise their prey unawares.

RARE: The creature's thoracic sac can be sold to horn or musical instrument makers.

OBSCURE: Whistling, screeching, or playing a musical instrument in the same key that the screechers wail in will actually trick the animals into believing you are one of their pack. Of course, that means they might follow you around as if you were one of their own—but at least it beats being eaten!

Hooks

- Amblin Orofisk, a shipbuilder in Free Fingers, is building a new sailboat for a rather flashy noble, who would like it to be possessed of a horn that can "shake the very ocean floor." A number of screecher air sacks would do the trick, especially a very big one, and there's a reward for bringing in two dozen of the things.

- Glymmoddy the master piper is opening a college. He needs three dozen air sacks from screechers, only that greedy shipwright Amblin Orofisk seems to be buying up all in a 100-mile radius. Bringing him as many as one can (no questions asked) will garner a rich reward.

I'm not sure, the screecher's shriek is the "musical" instrument produced from their air sacs. If I never hear Oodic pipes again, it will be too soon.
Sepulchral Lurker

Large Undead
Hit Dice: 8d12+3 (55 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
Speed: 40 ft., burrow 10 ft.
AC: 14 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +4 natural)
Attacks: 2 claws +8, bite +3 melee
Damage: Claw 1d6+5, bite 1d8+2
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Breath weapon, create spawn, frightful presence, improved grab, rend
Special Qualities: Undead, damage reduction 5/-1, resistant to blows
Saves: Fort +2, Ref +2, Will +7
Abilities: Str 21, Dec 13, Con —
Int 8, Wis 12, Cha 14
Skills: Hide +10*, Listen +12, Move Silently +12, Spot +12
Feats: Improved Initiative, Toughness
Climate/Terrain: Any desert and underground
Organization: Solitary (plus 2–20 skeletons of various types under its control)
Challenge Rating: 9
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 9–16 HD (Large); 17–32 HD (Huge); 33–50 HD (Gargantuan)

Sepulchral lurkers were created to guard tombs, temples, and other places of import found in the Bloodstone Marches. Most sepulchral lurkers are linked to a particular place, although my guide Quimut has told me that some of these creatures roam the Bloodstone Marches freely.

Sepulchral lurkers are frightening creatures, the mere sight of which is enough to shake most men’s resolve. They are hunchbacked beasts that stand 8 to 9 feet tall with clawed and powerful arms. Their skin (where there is any) is a dull reddish color, and their bones are dark orange red. Where their monstrous heart should be is a humanoid heart beats, pulsing with powerful necromantic magic.

Sepulchral lurkers are found where treasure, sand, and skeletons meet, and such was the case when a group of adventurers and myself ran into one in the remains of a ruined tomb. Quimut warned against our entering, but hungry for the knowledge we were seeking, we pressed him to go forward. After winding our way into the ruin, we came to a place where the sandstone floors gave way to the mingled sight of ancient sand and scattered skeletons. Quimut said he would go no further. I agreed, but two of our comrades, Gible Hornt and Figan Blaiz, wished to press on. After a heated discussion, the two decided to press forward while the rest of us set up camp a little farther back in the ruins.

We watched them start across the sand occasionally stopping to pick up something from the ground. When they had crossed about halfway, the sands and skeletons shook to life. A sepulchral lurker and half a dozen skeletons suddenly erupted from the ground around them, barring their way back to us. I started towards our doomed comrades, but Quimut took his war-fern and barred my way.

The fight (if you can call two men fleeing for their lives such) lasted less than a minute, and within seconds of their death, the flesh of the two bodies dissolved away, leaving...
Sepulchral Lurker

behind two perfectly polished skeletons. Its work finished, the sepulchral lurker and its skeletal cohorts (including our lost comrades) burrowed their way into the sand where they await the next set of adventurous souls to come along. I only hope that those who do will heed the warning I left on the tomb’s archway.

Combat

The sepulchral lurker usually attacks from a hidden position, most often erupting from out of the earth. The skeletons under its command are used as distractions, while its weapon comes unmercifully with its vicious claws and bite.

Breath Weapon (Su): Cone of weakness, 30 feet long, once every 1d4 rounds; 1d6 temporary Strength damage to all living creature within the area of affect, Fortitude save (DC 14) negates.

Create Spawn (Su): A humanoid or monstrous humanoid slain by a sepulchral lurker rises as a skeleton under the sepulchral lurker’s control in 1d4 rounds.

Frightful Presence (Ex): This ability takes effect automatically whenever the sepulchral lurker attacks or charges. All creatures within 30 feet must make a Will save (DC 16) or become shaken for 5d6 rounds.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability the sepulchral lurker must hit with a claw attack.

Rend (Ex): A sepulchral lurker that hits with both claws latches onto the opponent’s body and tears the flesh. This attack automatically does 2d6+7 points of damage.

Resistant to Blows (Ex): Due to its mummified body physical attacks deal only half damage to a sepulchral lurker.

Skills: A sepulchral lurker, due to its coloration and affinity for burying itself in sand, receives a +10 racial bonus to Hide checks when in its native environment.

Treasure

Sepulchral lurkers are often the wardens of very valuable treasures, which can run the gamut of one’s imagination. There is also frequently treasure left behind by victims killed by the sepulchral lurker (and subsequently raised as skeletons).

If killed, the sepulchral lurker’s heart turns into a porous rock. If powdered and ingested, the stone allows the person who consumed it to add +2 to the DC for all saving throws against spells from the school of Necromancy that they cast. This effect lasts for 10 hours. Each sepulchral lurker heart produces 10 doses, which sell for about 200 gp each.

A sepulchral lurker’s claws can be made into masterwork daggers for the cost of a normal dagger. The claws have a hardness of 10 and 20 hp.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.

UNCOMMON: A huge undead beast may be found guarding treasures hidden in the Bloodstone Marches.

RARE: These sepulchral lurkers are often accompanied by the risen skeletons of those they have slain.

OBSCURE: A sepulchral lurker’s heart is a potent necromantic ability booster.

Hooks

A necromancer in disguise approaches the PCs in the hopes of hiring them to hunt down a sepulchral lurker and return its heart to him. If the offer is accepted, the PCs will receive a map that leads them to a tomb in the Bloodstone Marches (perhaps even the one mentioned by Viktor Fendralke). There they find a sepulchral lurker, but—more importantly—they just might discover what it was guarding.
Shaft Wight

Medium-size Undead
Hit Dice: 5d12 (32 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft., burrow 5 ft.
AC: 18 (+2 Dex, +2 natural, +2 chain shirt)
Attacks: Mining picks +1/+1 melee; or 2 claws +5 melee
Damage: Mining pick 1d6+3; or claw 1d4+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Attacks: Constitution drain, gravel vomit
Special Qualities: Undead, darkvision 60 ft., +2 resistance
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +3, Will +5

Abilities:
Str 16, Dex 15, Con...
Int 13, Wis 13, Cha 15
Skills:
Climb +6, Crafty (blacksmith)
+4, Hide +8, Jump +9,
+8, Listen +8, Move Silently +8,
Profession (miner) +9
Feats:
Ambidexterity, Power Attack,
Two-Weapon Fighting
Climate/Terrain: Cold underground
Organization: Solitary or small band (2–6)
Challenge Rating: 5
Alignment: Usually chaotic evil
Advancement: 6–10 HD (Medium-size)

Shaft wights are dangerous restless dead, jealous of all life and hateful towards those who walk the tunnels where they met their doom. They arise from miners who have been buried alive, trapped under the weight of stone, suffocating on gravel and sand.

I had doubts of their existence until the Divided Peak Mining Guild invited me to investigate an abandoned mine shaft deep in the Cardare Mountains. I first got a look at their most recent victim, pulled up from one of the deeper passages. He had a gruesome hole punched right into his skull, apparently from a mining pick. Even more horrifying was seeing the sticky gravel that completely filled his mouth and throat.

We ventured into the tunnels and got a better look at these crafty creatures. In a dark passage it would be easy to mistake one for a living miner. But upon closer examination, their skin is unnaturally pale and emits a bitter chill. Their arms and legs show signs of broken bones, but this does not inhibit their movements. Their lifeless eyes are pitch-black like holes, and their mouths hang open, allowing saliva to drip from their lips.

They wear tunics of crude metal links, shaped in undying patience from scraps. Those without picks attack with long, grimy, black-nailed fingers, and their touch saps the health of those they claw, making breathing labored. Worst of all is the ability to vomit a stream of gravel. I have no doubt that they use this to suffocate victims in a horrible parody of their own deaths.

We observed with interest that these undead miners had continued in their work, burrowing tunnels, and mining ore. It is uncertain if this is a larger purpose to such excavations. I’ve heard reports from other mining companies of shaft wights disrupting mining operations, provoking tunnel collapses, extinguishing lanterns, and ambushing miners.

Combat

Shaft wights are skilled at stealth, preferring to strike those who are alone. They frequently wield a pair of wicked mining picks (equal to heavy pick, critical 20/x4), but are just as dangerous with their claws.
Constitution Drain (Su): The claws of a shaft wight cause a temporary loss of 2 points of Constitution with each hit. Victims reduced to 0 Constitution die immediately.
Gravel Vomit/Create Spawn (Su):
Twice per hour, a shaft wight can spray a foul mixture of gravel, sand, and brickish liquid from its mouth. This spray does not require an attack roll, has a range of 5 feet and deals 2d8 damage to a single target (Reflex save for half damage, DC 14).
If a shaft wight has a victim helpless or unconscious and then slays them by spraying this mixture into their mouth, the victim will arise as a shaft wight in twelve hours unless attended to by a cleric, who needs to wash out the gravel with holy water. This also applies to victims killed by Constitution drain who are subsequently sprayed with vomit.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Shaft wights are undead spawned rarely when miners suffocate to death after tunnels collapse upon them. It is rumored they can be head mining deep in abandoned shafts and will attack anyone who ventures close.
UNCOMMON: Shaft wights can vomit gravel on a person, causing injury and trying to suffocate their victims. They also have a touch that drains health.
RARE: Those who die with their mouths filled with gravel from a shaft wight will arise as one themselves within approximately 12 hours unless attended to by a cleric with holy water.
OBSCURE: Shaft wights are working toward some common goal, perhaps attempting to unify their tunnels and create their own unliving society beneath the earth. The more shaft wights who gather in one place, the more organized and cunning they become.

Hooks

The threat of shaft wights could compel a concerned mining guild to seek out PCs to investigate. A good start is the discovery of a body slain in their traditional fashion. These undead are rare enough that they are not well known, and the corpse might suddenly go "missing" when it rises to join its brethren.

Alternately, shaft wights expanding tunnels might eventually break into some other underground area or buried tomb that the PCs are currently exploring. This dungeon crawl just got a whole lot messier!
Skigg

Tiny Beast

Hit Dice: 1d8 (4 hp)

Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)

Speed: 40 ft.

AC: 13 (+2 size, +1 Dex)

Attacks: 2 claws +1 melee

Damage: Claw 1d3-3

Face/Reach: 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft.

Special Qualities: Explosion, darkvision 60 ft.

Saves: Fort +0, Ref +3, Will -3

Abilities: Str 4, Dex 13, Con 10

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Skills</th>
<th>Feats</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hide +4, Move Silently +4.</td>
<td>Weapon Finesse (claw)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Int 5, Wis 5, Cha 10

Climate/Terrain: Any land

Organization: Solitary or troop (3–8)

Challenge Rating: 1

Alignment: Always neutral

Advancement: 2–4 HD (Tiny)

The notorious skigg I tell a cautionary tale: it is a story of two proud wizards of ancient Caspia who met their untimely ends. Gamers and alchemists are advised to remember this anecdote.

Skiggs are pleasant, furry little creatures that migrated to the Kingdoms as stowaways on Ogoroth ships centuries ago. Treasured as pets, skiggs once lived in great abundance in the kingdoms, balls of motiled fluff, the size of a small dog with stumpy legs and somewhat squat little bodies.

Good-tempered and a ferocious enemy of the rat, many a household kept skiggs as pets. They were prized by the Royal Cygnaran household as well and kept the storehouses and armories free of pests.

Prized until...

Prized until, that is, the use of alchemical blasting powder became widespread.

Two Cygnaran mages, known only as Morgan and Bosc, were charged with finding a safe method of storage for the Caspian milita’s stash of the volatile stuff. A clean dry warehouse seemed to fit the bill, and barrels of powder were laid in rank after rank, red and black, floor to ceiling. Of course, skiggs were introduced to keep the storehouse rate-free.

Well, imagine Morgan and Bosc’s surprise when they entered the cavernous room the next morning to find a dozen bloated skiggs lying in a groaning stupor beside two gnawed-open kegs! Furious (and not a little chagrined at having so much of the precious powder ruined), the two wizards elected to dissect the offending creatures on the spot to retrieve the lost material.

But when the hot-tempered Bosc approached them, the skiggs growled menacingly—it seemed that to a skigg, powder is as powerfully addictive as rags to a weasel! But growl or no, the angry mage landed a savage kick on the first in his path.

And the beast exploded.

Well, Morgan found the scorched Bosc far too amusing, collapsing in gales of laughter. Alas, in his rage, Bosc laid hold of an enraged skigg, hurling it at Morgan with all his might. It missed her by a wide margin. Had it only missed the rack of kegs above her head, the tale would be less tragic.

It is said that the entire city of Caspia was dealt for a week and a day, and sailors in the Gulf of Cygnar reported a rain of brick and mortar hitting the decks of their ships out at sea.

Needless to say, this is why we give an angry man “a skigg’s berth” to this day.
Combat

Skiggs will avoid combat unless cornered or provoked; they are far more temperamental after having eaten blasting powder. They attack with their claws, though their tendency to explode when enraged can be far more deadly.

Explosion (Ex): Any full skigg (one that has consumed 2 pounds of powder) that is struck with a weapon or receives similar physical damage from a magical attack (mace, missile, fireball, etc.) has a 50% chance of immediately exploding. This does 5d6 points of fire damage to everything within a 10-foot radius. Anyone caught within the blast radius may make a Reflex save (DC 15) for half damage. Skiggs that consume a mixture of red and black powder will explode spontaneously for half damage.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Though banned as pets by royal decree, many feral skiggs still inhabit the sewers, woods, and fields around town.

UNCOMMON: Skiggs were banned because of continued (and often deadly) break-ins to blasting powder storage houses. RARE: Striking a powder-fed skigg can have explosive consequences.

OBSCURE: Powder in a skigg's gut (up to 10 pounds) can be recovered within 1 hour of ingestion, though it needs to be washed in strong grain alcohol and thoroughly dried.

Treasure

A bounty on skiggs is usually in effect wherever gunpowder is produced or stored. Skigg pelts can fetch as much as 20 gp each, depending on the area.

Hooks

- Bandits have hijacked a big caravan of powder destined for an army outpost. Unfortunately, their lair is infested with skiggs, and a tense race is on to see whether the PCs or the bandits, or the skiggs get to the powder first—without blowing the place sky high.

- Someone has set a group of skiggs free in the local army armory! Now, why would the guards need to cook up such an obvious diversion.
The Iron Kingdoms only recently became aware of the threat known as the Skorne when Vinter Raelborne IV came into Carvis accompanied by them in his recent assault. I, however, have been aware of them for some time. My faithful guide to the Bloodstone Marches, Quintus, has encountered them several times as has told me a bit about them; I also took the opportunity to interrogate a few prisoners among them after their recent invasion in my home city.

The Skorne are very similar to men, though there are legends that their ancient history is tied with that of the elves—mind you, it indicates not whether they are related. In general, the Skorne are stronger, taller, and thinner than a typical Cygnaran, but differ little otherwise anatomically. In appearance, though, they are quite savage, sporting rugged features, tattoos, and bald heads. As a people, the Skorne are civilized, but torn by their ruling class's bloodthirsty nature. Quintus—who once narrowly escaped slavery by Skorne hands—tells me that they have a very stratified society with a small ruling caste.

They are also sharply divided into several factions led by various warlords, and most of their time is occupied by civil infighting. I reckon this is one reason why we've never seen much of them in the Iron Kingdoms. They are also fairly technologically advanced, possessing their own form of alchemy and a seemingly unique and powerful understanding of the arcane, particularly of necromantic and offensive magics.

As a warlike nation, the Skorne are able warriors. Slavery is a popular thing in their culture, both among men and beasts. Anyone captured by a Skorne slaver or regiment can expect to be back on the field of battle in no time, this time sporting a collar and chain, and perhaps even some strange augmentations to boot. They will also have the pleasure of fighting alongside a number of vile Marches creatures enslaved and trained for combat.

Though the Skorne have yet to become recognized as a great threat, I can foresee this status changing soon. Raelborne's involvement with them is an ill omen indeed. From the prisoners I interrogated I was able to glean only sparse details. They refer to him almost with mythical respect for his crossing of the Stormlands, a subregion of the Bloodstone Marches that may very well be the most deadly tract of land on Calr...
Quasit tells me that the Stormlands is one of the few things that has kept this vile civilization at bay. Raclhborne seems to have penetrated this inhospitable land and gained a great deal of respect because of it. If the Skorne continue to follow him, I fear we may soon find his dark, oppressive shadow arching all the way from the Marches to the distant Schandke Islands.

Combat

The Skorne are very capable in combat. As a civilized race, they have developed combat techniques and strategies similar to what is found among the other civilized races of the Iron Kingdoms. They possess firearms and similar armaments, though they differ in alchemical operation from those found in other regions; they are also slightly less advanced. War beasts and other manner of combat-trained creatures are somewhat common among them.

Skorne Traits (Ex):
- +2 Str; Skorne are slightly stronger than the typical human.
- Medium-size. Skorne are about a foot taller than average humans and typically much leaner.
- Bonus hit die +1d8; the Skorne are a naturally rugged people.
- Base speed 30 feet.
- +1 bonus feat at 1st level.
- +4 extra skill points at first level and 1 extra point at each level thereafter. Skorne are just as versatile as humans.
- Prejudice penalties (see below). As a foreign and hostile race, Skorne are hindered socially.
- Automatic language: Skorne. Cygnaran might be learned as a bonus language if gleaned from prisoners and the like.
- Favored class: Fighter or wizard. Skorne are not as adaptable in this regard as humans.
- Level adjustment +1; Skorne are slightly more powerful than most races.

Prejudice Penalties: When in human, elven, or dwarven lands, or when interacting with people from such places who lack extended exposure to Skorne, all Skorne suffer a -6 circumstance penalty to all Bluff, Diplomacy, Gather Information, and similar social skill checks due to the racial prejudice that is extended them. At the DM’s discretion, there may be situations where these penalties will be waived or halved.

Treasure

Skorne are known to keep just as wide a variety of treasure as any human culture, and they tend to value many of the same things. Members of the lower castes of their society, however, are far less likely to possess valuables than those of the upper caste. Slaves will bear no treasure at all (unless, of course, you’re a slaver).

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None prior to the events of The Wildfire Trilogy. Afterwards, there is a mysterious, malicious humanoid race that has emerged from the Bloodstone Marches.

UNCOMMON: These people are very similar to humans, though taller and far more savage in appearance, many with tattoos and bald heads.

RARE: These people are called the Skorne, and they come from a very hostile society that if properly organized might pose the single greatest threat to the Iron Kingdoms.

OBSCURE: Vinter Raclhborne IV has allied himself with a strong Skorne faction, which he is using to reclaim his Cygnaran throne. Those who know Raclhborne can expect this to be just the beginning.

Hooks

A foolhardy Caspian noble who fancies himself an explorer recently decided to venture a journey into the Bloodstone Marches. He was quickly attacked and subdued by a band of Skorne soldiers. Luckily, one of his servants managed to escape and find his way back to Cygnar. His master has surely been sold into slavery, and the servant is desperately seeking help in rescuing him.

="No commander, these precautions won't be necessary. The Cygnarans won't be expecting us. They don't know the threats of the Skorne, but trust me... they soon will."

—Vinter Raclhborne IV, to one of his Skorne lieutenants
Spine Ripper

Medium-size Monstrous Humanoid

Hit Dice: 6d8+18 (45 hp)
Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 20 (+2 Dex, +8 natural)
Attacks: 2 spines +11 melee, 1 claw +6 melee, 1 bite +6 melee
Damage: Spine 1d6+5, claw 1d8+3 and poison, bite 1d4+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. / 5 ft.
Special Attacks: Poison, flanking attack, impaling rush

Special Qualities: Scent

Saves: Fort +5, Ref +7, Will +5
Abilities: Str 20, Dex 14, Con 16,
Int 4, Wis 10, Cha 9
Skills: Hide +7, Jump +8, Move
Silently +7, Spot +5
Feats: Endurance, Alertness

Climate/Terrain: Any land
Organization: Solitary or band (2-5)
Challenge Rating: 4
Alignment: Always neutral
Advancement: 6-12 HD (Large)

There are few creatures here in the Iron Kingdoms that roam far and wide enough to call the entire continent their home. The speckled widow bear is such a creature, as is the Ionian swooper, and it troubles me that I must add the aggressive spine ripper to that list as well. These beasts have been spotted as far north as Ohka, as far wide as the Sendaro Islands, and my assistant Edrea tells me that they are even known in the forests of Jot. The spine ripper looks somewhat like a very top-heavy and muscle-bound bear with a huge maw and massive claws. Yet it's named for the many spines that bristle across its body, and for all its ferocity, it's a simple creature that lives only to hunt, forage, and feast on just about anything. While they seem like little more than beasts, they are in truth more advanced; I've even witnessed primitive signs of evolution—tool use, simple communication, and even teamwork.

Its wicked spines, I have noted, are built not for more than just intimidation. The spines jutting from its body serve the creature both defensively and offensively. Enemies that try to attack it find it difficult to strike the spine ripper without being hurt, and the beast is quite adept at maneuvering those spikes so that opponents are unable to successfully flank it. But what one should be far more concerned about is the spine ripper's ability to turn those spikes around and use them as lethal weapons—especially if it's making a diving leap at you!

Another, even more deadly, type of barb is found on the thumb of the claw, and it bears a mild, but effective poison. Any contact with it will immediately find their coordination and strength sapped from their muscles. Unfortunately, this is usually enough for the spine ripper to overcome most prey.

Combat

In combat the spine ripper prefers to stalk solitary or obviously weaker prey. It will attempt stealth until within about 100 feet or so, when it will charge. It will rely primarily upon the use of its claws and spines. Although not particularly intelligent, the creature is somewhat cunning and will use a mild amount of strategy.
Spine Ripper

Poison (Ex): Claw; Fortitude save (DC 16); initial damage of 1d4 temporary Dexterity and secondary damage of 1d4 temporary Strength.

Flanking Attack (Ex): The creature is able to attack flanking opponents with its spines at no penalty. Its reach effectively extends in a 360º arc about its body. It does not need to change its facing to attack any opponent about it with a spine attack. Furthermore, opponents flanking the creature do not gain any flanking bonus because they must remain on the defensive (rogues may still use their sneak attack).

Impaling Rush (Ex): One of its favorite attack modes is a leaping charge, which ends with the spine ripper tackling its prey and impaling it. This is treated as a charge and a bull rush, which does 3d8+7 damage regardless of whether or not it pushes the opponent back. If the target is successfully pushed back, he is also pinned. Poisoning does not occur, but may on subsequent attacks. Victims may make a Reflex save (DC 15) to roll with the blow for half damage.

Treasure

Spine rippers are not known to hoard anything of value, however their spines find many uses, from dart shafts, to sewing needles, to harpoon heads. They can fetch anywhere from 5 cp to 5 gp depending on the type of barb and the local market. Their venom likewise is valuable, although difficult to extract. It fetches as much as 15-25 gp per effective dose.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Spine rippers can be found in just about any land and any climate.

UNCOMMON: Spine rippers hunt largely predawn and in the morning, and they are usually quite groggy in late evening.

RARE: Biannually, spine rippers migrate to one of two dozen estuarial mating grounds, where groups numbering into the hundreds can be witnessed in holding revelry.

OBSCURE: Spine rippers are strongly attracted to the scent of the uncommon food spice veturm, which can be easily used to throw them off of one's trail... or on to someone else's.

Hooks

Llael seems to be having a far worse spine ripper problem lately than most other kingdoms, and Prime Minister Deyar Glabrynx IX has recently placed a bounty on their hides of 20 gold crowns per scalp. As of yet, few adventurers have stepped forward to collect, but entrepreneurial individuals could collect quite a bundle under the right circumstances.
Steamling

Tiny Elemental (Fire)

Hit Dice: 1d8+3 (7 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+5 Dex)
Speed: Fly 60 ft. (good)
AC: 17 (+2 size, +5 Dex)
Attacks: Bite +2 melee
Damage: Bite 1d3
Face/Reach: 2 1/2 ft. by 2 1/2 ft./0 ft.
Special Attacks: Scalding bite
Special Qualities: Elemental (fire), boiling frenzy
Saves: Fort +3, Ref +7, Will -1

Abilities: Str 10, Dex 20, Con 16,
Int 8, Wis 8, Cha 10
Skills: Disable Device +4, Hide +9,
Move Silently +9, Spot +3

Climate/Terrain: Any locales near machinery
Organization: Solitary, gang (4-8), swarm (10-16)
Challenge Rating: 2
Alignment: Always chaotic neutral
Advancement: 2-3 HD (Small)

N ot a lot of folks know about wizard's coal, a rare, nasty-smelling alchemical reagent. Alchemists use it in potions, and wizards use it in flame-based spells; hence the name. When I was a youth, my father had this theory that it could be put to use as a fuel for steam engines.

He and my brothers had cobbled together a steamjack, a smaller model made from scavenged parts. The thing was a heap of junk, but the engine my father put in it had been lifted from a union caravan in the dead of the night—it was top notch quality and ready to go.

With the help of my steady mage-type he knew, Father bought about twenty pounds of wizard's coal. This batch had been alchemically treated to burn slowly (it usually goes up in a burst). His theory was that with an infusion of wizard's coal a much smaller amount of fuel would be needed to keep the jack running longer and cleaner.

Once the fueler came up to temperature there was some sort of reaction in the steam plant. Of course, we had stood will back, not sure what would happen. Father may have had some cack-eyed schemes, but he was a stickler for safety. As we watched the primary boiler started to bulge, and clouds of striking steam shot everywhere. Amazingly, the steam rapidly condensed into a swarm of little winged translucent beasts with broad paws.

The creatures poured into and out of the engine for a full hour. Once the wizard's coal burnt low they flew off into the night, howling and dancing. Thereafter you couldn't run a steam engine in the area without the things showing up and boiling over the whole works. Finally we had to move out and find a new place to set up shop.

Only during my studies many years later did I discover what had happened. Father had inadvertently woken a nest of steamlings. Steamlings are elemental spirits that sometimes lay dormant in wizard's coal. If tainted wizard's coal is heated slowly to combustion temperatures, the steamling awakens. The things eat steam, and they also have an innate ability to heat water. If there are enough of them, they can boil a steam engine over and disable it, or worse cause it to explode.

Steamlings can be found in nature on rare occasion, near hot springs or other places where wizard's coal, water, and intense heat can be found in close proximity.

Combat

Steamlings are rambunctious, chaotic, and driven by impulse. The primary concern of a steamling is to feed on steam and spawa. Unless attacked, a steamling will go about these activities. Steam engines are open doors to steamlings. They will infest a steam engine as soon as they hear it, often ruining it or causing it to burst.

Scalding Bite (Ex): Steamling bites are nasty and hard to heal. If a steamling bites unprotected skin it can leave a blister-Steamlings are nasty little bastards that can ruin a steam engine.

Uncommon: Steamlings come from tainted wizard's coal, which is sometimes accidentally mixed in with the regular coal used to fuel steam engines. If an engine starts to boil over it might be due to steamlings coming awake—best to shut it down.

Rare: A steamling can be killed if you throw a bucket of cold water on it (this does 2d6 points of damage to it; Reflex save for half damage, DC 15).

Obscure: Tainted wizard's coal is highly valuable to some wizards and alchemists. Steamlings leave a faint dewormer of magic on the coal they sleep in. Detection spells can reveal them.

Treasure

Steamlings don't have lairs or treasure. However, a chunk of wizard's coal that is tainted with a dormant steamling can be used as a component in fire-based spells. Using the coal as a component consumes the creature's life force along with the wizard's coal. This imbues the spell with the effects of the Maximize Spell feat. A single chunk of tainted wizard's coal is about the same size and weight as a small rock and is worth about 700 gp.

Normal wizard's coal is regularly about 10–15 gp per pound and is typically only of value to alchemists and some spell-casters.

Hooks

An enterprising wizard is cultivating steamlings and has a moderately sized swarm. He has found a way to train and feed them, and has been buying all the wizard's coal he can to use in a yet-rich-quick scheme. Sadly, he has not been able to control the steamling appetite for steam. A few steam engines at use in the area have been ruined in highly suspicious accidents.
Tatzylwurms are a remarkable group of predators that roam the less tamed lands and waters of the Iron Kingdoms. There are two dominant varieties, “painted” and “pale.” (The painted form, being less dangerous, will be described more fully in a future work.)

Painted tatzylwurms make their homes mostly along the remote rivers and shorelines of the Iron Kingdoms, but can also be found within bogs and mires. Though not as aggressive as their cousins, these creatures are still quite territorial.

The highly aggressive pale tatzylwurms make their homes in the most secluded areas of the Iron Kingdoms. They are fearless and unyielding creatures, attacking anything and everything that comes within their territory. Their scales are an indistinct grayish color, perfect for concealing themselves within the shadows.

Capable of leaping great distances, the pale tatzylwurm has been known to make leaps of up to 20 yards in order to catch its prey (this fact was discovered as the result of the research of a colleague of mine, Professor Comanda Jagus, who spent the better part of six months studying tatzylwurms of all sorts).

According to Professor Jagus, pale tatzylwurms subsist upon a diet of “anything that moves.” He even reports having witnessed a pack of them attack and eat, at least in part, a tree-decaying steamjack, though I doubt the iron settled well with them.

All types of tatzylwurms have a wide array of weapons at their disposal, most notably their organization when working in packs. They are adept at herding fish, animals, and even humanoids into “kill zones,” as Professor Jagus puts it, where other tatzylwurms wait.

In combat pale tatzylwurms rely primarily upon their powerful jaws, paralytic poison, resilient hide, and strong bones. They use their acidic breath rarely, and only for defense.

Professor Jagus believes this to be because their acidic breath spoils the meat, and I am inclined to believe his assessment.

Combat

Pale tatzylwurms rely upon their powerful jaws to weaken and kill their foes, while their nearly seamless scales and reinforced bones protect them from harm. They rarely use their breath weapon upon prey, preferring to save it for self-defense.

Breath Weapon (Stg): The pale tatzylwurm's breath weapon sends forth a cone of acid, 30 feet long, once every 2d4 rounds; 6d4 damage to all within the area of effect. Fortitude save (DC 20) negates.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Whenever it attacks or charges, a pale tatzylwurm causes its foes to make a Will save (DC 15) or become shaken for 3d6 rounds.

Immunities: Pale tatzylwurms are immune to fear and fear-like effects. It is also immune to acid and paralysis attacks.

Paralysis: Upon a successful bite attack the victim must make a Fortitude save (DC 20) or be paralyzed for 1d4+3 rounds.

Resistant to Bludgeoning (Ex): Because of the pale tatzylwurm's resilient bones and hide, bludgeoning attacks deal only half damage to it.

Skills: Pale tatzylwurms gain a +20 racial bonus to their Jump checks and have double the normal maximum jumping distance. They also gain +10 to their Hide and MoveSilent checks while in natural settings.

Treasure

Weapon smiths can use pale tatzylwurm bones to make masterwork weapons for the cost of a normal weapon (see PH for more details on special and superior items). One pale tatzylwurm produces enough bone to make a single masterwork weapon of Large size, two masterwork weapons of Medium size, four masterwork weapons of Small size, and eight masterwork weapons of Tiny size. Note that the bone may also be used to create non-weapon masterwork items as well. All items made from the bone are considered to have a hardness of 8, 15 hp/inch of thickness, and are resistant to blows as per the special quality of the pale tatzylwurm.

Obscure: A tatzylwurm’s kidney holds juices that can be used as a potent antitoxin.

Hooks

A pack of pale tatzylwurms has taken up residence in the local area and has killed quite a number of farmhands and livestock. The local authorities approach the PCs and request their help with the beasts. If the PCs refuse, then there is always the possibility that they run across the pack in the middle of an attack on a farmstead or that the tatzylwurms, having tasted farm hands, ambush the party.

In order to tame the beasts, I had to become a ghost, invisible, and unheard. I staged that those who wish to hunt them do the same, else they find themselves in the terrible jaws of a tatzylwurm.

Professor Cordelia Jones
Years ago, I was on a mission that took me inside the Thornwood. It was difficult raising men to accompany me, since traversing this boggy wood was largely considered suicide. More than once I’ve been asked: “Why not just put a pistol to your head and pull the bloody trigger, Pendakor?” That one never fails to make me chuckle, but it doesn’t dissuade me much.

Ah, but the Thornwood, yes... I recall an observer screeching at us, being followed. I put the camp on alert, instructing the scout and some of his companions to lay a trap. Later that evening, we sniped what appeared to be a barbarian. Snared in netting, suspended from a shadow-branched bough, a huge man with painted skin streamed at the thick tufts and cursed us in choopy Kharidic. I scrutinized his tattoos, fascinated by the intricacies: many of them represented aspects of the Devourer. I began reciting what I knew about the ancient Tharn that once inhabited these woods in the thousands but who were presumed to have been destroyed.

Suddenly, the barbarian issued a thunderous bellow, and next I knew at least half a dozen of these savages bounded from the darkness. They were something more than just painted men. Bodies caked with thick muscles, they crossed distances in great leaps. One of them pilled into a man next to me, and I was too late to save him from having his throat torn out by long black claws. The savage turned its head toward me, and yellow eyes reflected the campfire light as it displayed a slaving mouthful of wolf-like fangs. I raised my shield and braced for the attack that never came.

Whether the bestial men concealed our much greater numbers or for whatever other reason, the slayer of my retainer bellowed a command, and two of them quickly pulled down their companion from our netting. The savage in front of me then threw the dead man over its powerfully built shoulders—as did a couple of the others I assumed, noticing afterward we were missing three men in all—and they leaped off into the darkness. No one seemed eager to give chase, and I sure wasn’t going after them alone.
(admittedly I entertained the idea briefly... but I may as well have put a pistol to my head and pulled the bloody trigger!)

Had we just been waylaid by remnants of an ancient people known as the Tharn? I must admit I believe so. Barbarians of any kind are extremely rare in Immorden these days, and the Tharn must truly be on the verge of extinction. I suppose that's why they were so keen to recover their man. In any case, I'm entertaining the idea of finding some hearty souls to accompany me back into those damnable woods to see if I can uncover more. Now where's my bloody pistol?

Combat

The Tharn have the ability to "channel the Warm." While they often tend to engage their opponents traditionally with sword or axe, the barbarians will willingly eschew their blades for their chaos frenzy, which they call the Gift of the Devourer.

Chaos Frenzy (Su): Like barbarians, the Tharn rage, but this rage has somehow altered to reflect their more bestial natures. They are able to chaos frenzy twice daily just like a barbarian of equivalent level is able to rage. While frenzied, their bodies physically change, gaining a +2 natural armor bonus due to a denser musculature and thickened hide. In addition, they receive +4 to Str, +4 to Con, and +5 to Will saves. They also gain darkvision 60 feet, the scent ability (MM), wolf-like fangs, and sharp black claws.

Treasure

The only treasure to be found among these depraved savages is the various weapons and other items that formerly belonged to their victims.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The Tharn were once a barbarian tribe in the Thornwood region.

UNCOMMON: The barbaric Tharn are a cursed lot who are said to eat people.

RARE: The Knights of Cygnar supposedly wiped the Tharn out ages ago, yet some of these Devourer-revering savages reside in the Thornwood to this day. After enduring the Ten Ills imposed by Morrow ages ago, they turned toward dark and savage magics in order to survive.

OBSCURE: The Tharn have embroiled themselves in a sinister pact of some sort, and they must ritually bestow one soul to the dark forces during certain moon cycles. (The three moons of Caen have a complex dance, but a correct alignment will occur on average once every three months.)

Hooks

Traveling through or near the Thornwood, the PCs are attacked by a band of bloodthirsty barbarians.

Their apparent leader wields a peculiar greatsword that emits waves of power. Scrutiny reveals it to possibly be a long-lost weapon of a great Cygnar knight who had fallen in battle ages ago when the royal order fought tribes of barbarians called the Tharn somewhere within the Dragonomine Peaks. It is believed that the order would pay substantially to regain the blade.
Thornwood Mauler

Large Animal

Hit Dice: $12d8+84$ (138 hp)

Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)

Speed: 40 ft.

AC: 20 (–1 size, +1 Dex, +10 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +19 melee, bite +14 melee; or gore +19 melee

Damage: Claw 2d6+11, bite 1d8+5; or gore 1d8+16

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.

Special Attacks: Maul, throw

Special Qualities: Burst of speed, improved scent

Saves: Fort +13, Ref +9, Will +2

Abilities: Str 32, Dex 13, Con 24,

Int 2, Wis 7, Cha 6

Skills: Listen +6, Spot +5

Climate/Terrain: Any forest

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: 9

Alignment: Always neutral

Advancement: 12–16 HD (Huge)

The woods of the Iron Kingdoms are regions rife with predators and other dangers. (My assistant Edrea tells me of the great splendors of wooded Ios, but we in human lands know better than to tarry under that dark canopy.) One of the fiercest terrors to stalk the woods is the Thornwood mauler, a colossal beast that stands at 14 feet in height when on its hindquarters. It takes its name from the dreaded wood in northern Cygnar, although it is far more common in the Scarfell Forest.

Unlike its smaller cousins, the Thornwood mauler has a very tough and rugged hide, and it has a most unusual mount. They are roving hunters and scavengers, and they've been known to wander absolutely incredible distances, even across terrains they wouldn't normally be found in. The renowned Cygnaran hunter Alen Ashley, a close friend of mine, once survived an encounter with one in his homeland, only to nearly be killed by the same beast (identifiable by the unmistakable scars he had given it) in a trip abroad in Khador. Another peculiar trait of the Thornwood mauler is that of it digging itself deep burrows to sleep in—a good mark to indicate you're on one's path.

It doesn't take much to arouse the fury of one of these beasts, and once you do it's usually the end of the line. They are incredibly strong, and they have a penchant for mauling their prey beyond all recognition. They also enjoy ramming their enemies and tossing them into the air before they are summarily pounced upon. Fortunately, these creatures are a little bit more foolish than most, and a clever person can outwit them and beat a hasty retreat.

Combat

Thornwood maulers attack to feed, but they are almost always hungry. They will often stalk prey for a short while, tracking them from a distance before charging into combat. They prefer to use their maul ability, killing opponents one by one until all are dead.

Burst of Speed (Ex): When running on all fours as a full-round action, the Thornwood mauler may double its speed (double speed run becomes 160 feet, and all-out run speed becomes 320 feet).
Thornwood Mauler

feet); it does not reach the maximum speed of 320 feet until the fifth round of sprinting. It may do this for a number of rounds equal to its Constitution bonus (+7), but once the sprint ends it may not repeat it for a number of rounds equal to twice its Constitution (+14); it is restricted to an absolute maximum movement of 10 feet for that duration, as it rests. If the mauler ends this run with a gore charge attack, the threat range for the attack jumps to 16–20/×4.

Improved Scent (Ex): As scent, but all ranges are tripled. The Thornwood mauler also receives a +6 racial bonus to all tracking attempts with this ability.

Maul (Ex): The Thornwood mauler may maul an opponent with a flurry of blows as a full-round action. It makes an extra claw attack, but all attacks that round (including bite) suffer a -2 penalty.

Throw (Ex): Any opponent of Medium-size or smaller who is struck by a gore attack that is the result of a charge is thrown 10 feet back and suffers an additional 1d8+2 damage; they are also considered prone. Characters with the evasion special ability who make a successful Reflex save (DC 27) are not affected by this ability (though they may still suffer damage from the charge).

RARE: If being attacked by a mauler, it is best to curl up into a ball. This prevents the beast from attacking with its maul ability. If you're extremely lucky, it will become frustrated and leave you alone.

OBSCURE: Many maulers seem to migrate between Thornwood in Cygnar and Scarsfell Forest in Khadar, although they only make this trek once every several years. Why exactly they do this remains a mystery.

Treasure

The hide of the Thornwood mauler is prized by armor-smiths wishing to craft hide armor. A full hide might sell for around 200 gp. All hide armor constructed of a mauler's hide has an additional +2 AC bonus and sells for three to four times normal market value.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Thornwood maulers are fierce and powerful predators that are usually found in wooded areas.

UNCOMMON: They have an incredible sense of smell, and if one is tracking you, it's best to get downwind of it quickly.

Hooks

A vain and pompous Caspian socialite has gotten himself into some trouble claiming that he is a skilled enough hunter to track down and slay a Thornwood mauler, and he's been called on it and dared to follow through. The noble is looking for a band of established adventurers to tag along with him and "assist" in the hunt. The work is dangerous, but the pay is quite good.

"The thrill to dealing with a Thornwood mauler is quite easy. Simply head off and stick your head toward your prey; then thank Morris for the ride and the good luck. May the god save you.

The fateful mauler hunter Allen Ashley
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Thrall (Risen)</th>
<th>Thrall (Warrior)</th>
<th>Thrall (Slave)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Medium-size Undead</td>
<td>Medium-size Undead</td>
<td>Medium-size Undead</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice: 1/2d12 (3 hp)</td>
<td>Hit Dice: 1d12 (6 hp)</td>
<td>Hit Dice: 1/2d12 (3 hp)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative: +4 (Improved Initiative)</td>
<td>Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)</td>
<td>Initiative: N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed: 30 ft.</td>
<td>Speed: 20 ft.</td>
<td>Speed: 30 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC: 12 (+2 natural)</td>
<td>AC: 18 (+1 Dex, +2 natural, +3 breastplate)</td>
<td>AC: 12 (+2 natural)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attacks: Bite +1 melee</td>
<td>Attacks: Longsword, battleaxe, or heavy mace +1 melee</td>
<td>Attacks: N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Damage: Bite 1d4</td>
<td>Damage: Longsword, battleaxe, or heavy mace 1d8</td>
<td>Damage: N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.</td>
<td>Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.</td>
<td>Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities: Undead</td>
<td>Special Qualities: Undead, +2 turn resistance</td>
<td>Special Qualities: Undead</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves: Fort +0, Ref +2, Will +2</td>
<td>Saves: Fort +0, Ref +2, Will +2</td>
<td>Saves: Fort +0, Ref +0, Will +2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities: Str 10, Dex 10, Con —, Int 2, Wis 10, Cha 4</td>
<td>Abilities: Str 10, Dex 12, Con —, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 6</td>
<td>Abilities: Str 10, Dex 10, Con —, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skills: Listen +3, Spot +3</td>
<td>Skills: Climb +0, Hide +0, Listen +3, Move Silently +1, Spot +3</td>
<td>Skills: N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (bite)</td>
<td>Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (longsword, battleaxe or heavy mace)</td>
<td>Feats: N/A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Climate/Terrain: Any</td>
<td>Organization: Any</td>
<td>Climate/Terrain: Any</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Organization: Any</td>
<td>Challenge Rating: 1/2</td>
<td>Organization: Any</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Challenge Rating: 1/2</td>
<td>Alignment: Usually neutral</td>
<td>Challenge Rating: 1/2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alignment: Usually neutral evil</td>
<td>Advancement: 1–2 HD (Medium-size)</td>
<td>Alignment: Usually lawful evil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advancement: 1–2 HD (Medium-size)</td>
<td>Advancement: 2–4 HD (Medium-size)</td>
<td>Advancement: 1–2 HD (Medium-size)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
he art of necromancy becomes a morbid fascination for the majority of its practitioners. It is not to be taken lightly, and I trust that all who read this consider at length and with prudence the information I am about to present.

The "rise" of glyph magic—if you’ll pardon the epigram—has enabled those who dabble in the dark art to create a different breed of unliving. Most of you have heard of these abominations, if not encountered them. They are called thirls—a newly extensive class of undead of varying levels of ability, power, and intellect, which I will endeavor to cover shortly.

First, each and every thrill has one particular thing in common—that is, the way they are created. This amalgam of necromancy and glyph magic can be simple or complex depending on the creator’s ability and desire. To create a thrill, a necromancer needs to assemble the required body parts and enchant them, laying glyphs of power on the collected bones and even the flesh, if applicable. Many of the basic types are the simple skeleton guards, which has only a few of the modest glyphs, while a necromancer’s master creation is normally covered from head-to-toe in arcane tattoos yielding terrible powers. It is the glyph magic that determines the thrill’s characteristics; it appears the body type is incidental. A “fresh” thrill is by no means any better than one crafted from aged bones, for it is the glyphs that make all the difference.

There are families of glyphs that determine the thrill’s strength, its combat skills, its resistance to elemental turning, a wide host of its various other attributes, even its intellect. A necromancer with a skilled eye might be able to determine much of an individual thrill’s capability by seeing the symbols laid upon it. New glyphs spied on a vanquished foe can be examined and possibly added to a necromancer’s own library. Laying a glyph on a thrill is a procedure very akin to any enchanter imbuing a magical item. It takes a great deal of time, and burns much of the caster’s will and energy, taking life from the caster and depositing it into the thrill.

Despite the unusual method of their creation, thirls are still undead. They are subject to the same rules. They can be turned, rebuked, or controlled, as any other undead. The strength of the glyphs determines how hard they are to turn and dispel—not the shape of the body.

It is my understanding there are six basic types of thirls—risen, slaves, warriors, lieutenants, baron thirls, and skarlox—but, as stated, how thirls are constructed can vary, and every thrill is as unique as the necromancer that created it.

Risen are the simplest possible thrill; if the source materials are fresh they bear a resemblance to zombies; if old, skeletons. They only dimly perceive their surroundings—and they are driven by all undeath’s ancient hate for anything living. They do not understand orders or perform useful work—all they can do is simply wander about in misery, attacking the living whenever they encounter them. Skilled necromancers have little use for such unsophisticated servants. Usually these are the invention of untrained dabblers and necromantic apprentices.

Next are slaves, a step above the risen in complexity. Slaves are near-mindless automatons. They can be given simple verbal orders, which they will follow without question. They are, for the most part, unaware of their environment, and are incapable of discriminating between other beings. I have had occasion to closely scrutinize this type of thrill, for one can walk right up next to it and be ignored entirely. They seem to have no perception of anything living besides their creator.

Unlike slaves, thrill warriors are quite aware of the living. These are the basic combat troops, slow-witted, but smarter than the slaves; they can easily perceive their surroundings, form simple plans, and work together to execute them. Warriors communicate somehow through hissing, teeth clicking, and growling.
Thralls

Thrall (Lieutenant)
Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 2d12 (13 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 20 ft.
AC: 18 (+1 Dex, +2 natural, +5 breastplate)
Attacks: Great axe or greatsword +2 melee
Damage: Great axe 1d12+1; or greatsword 2d6+1

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. /5 ft.
Special Qualities: Undead, +2 turn resistance
Saves: Fort +0, Ref +3, Will +3
Abilities: Str 12, Dex 13, Con —, Int 9, Wis 10, Cha 8
Skills: Climb +2, Hide +2, Listen +5, Move Silently +2, Sense Motive +2, Spot +5
Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (great axe or greatsword)

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Any
Challenge Rating: 1
Alignment: Usually lawful evil
Advancement: 3—5 HD (Medium-size)

Thrall (Bane Thrall)
Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 4d12 (26 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 20 ft.
AC: 20 (+3 natural, +7 half-plate)
Attacks: Great axe or heavy flail +4 melee
Damage: Great axe 1d12+3; or heavy flail 1d10+3

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft. /5 ft.
Special Qualities: Undead, +2 turn resistance, dark shroud
Saves: Fort +1, Ref +4, Will +4
Abilities: Str 14, Dex 13, Con —, Int 9, Wis 10, Cha 8
Skills: Climb +2, Hide +1, Listen +3, Move Silently +1, Sense Motive +2, Spot +7
Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (great axe or heavy flail)

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Any
Challenge Rating: 3
Alignment: Usually lawful evil
Advancement: 5—7 HD (Medium-size)

Analysis of the Garrow specimen indicates a high degree of necromantic skill.
Thrafts

Lieutenants are much like the warriors, but the applied phylact magic impacts this breed of thrall with an uncanny intellect heretofore unseen in the basic convention of necromantic art. They speak the language of the warriors, yet are also able to understand the language of men, and I have encountered lieutenants on two separate occasions that were capable of speaking some limited Cygnaran. The lieutenants coordinate the efforts of the other lesser thralls, issuing orders, and I've even witnessed them come to the aid of their comrades in peril.

Similar to lieutenants in wit are the bane thralls, but they are far more powerful in the physical sense. These abominations are used primarily as undead shock troops and guardians of most prized possessions or dark secrets. The tendency among necromancers is to ensnare the bane thralls in heavy armor—half-plate seems to be the most common. The trademark of this type of thrall, aside from being of sturdier make, is a dreadfully dark pall their very being emanates; this pall has both demoralizing and anti-healing characteristics. I have experienced the touch of this hair-raising gloom, and it is very cold and quite unpleasant.

Skarlocks are the nastiest thrall I've encountered, for they are spellcasting thralls generally considered a necromancer's masterpiece. Skarlocks have the ability to cast any spell their master knows, given that the power is bequeathed unto them by virtue of inscribing the necessary runes. They are capable of more reasoning and collective thought than all other thralls combined, and I reason this is likely so a skarlock properly knows how to position its magic to have the most damaging effects on its adversaries. I have witnessed four of these creatures—speaking to each other in a series of clicks and hisses I have come to call thrallspeak—simultaneously toss bolts of light, flame, and acid in a concentrated effort against one mighty barbarian chieftain, laying this opponent low before he swung his axe once.

Thus far, these are the varieties of thrall I have had occasion to encounter in my travels, not to say this is the full menagerie. Necromancers are ever wary, tirelessly combing the realms, probing for new and deadlier types of phylact magic, and I have no illusions that there are other types of thrall beings not recorded here. Anyone who has proof of other kinds is welcome to pay me a visit at the university; even necromancers are welcome, but best leave your skarlocks outside.

Combat

Those thralls that are capable of combat generally only do so at the bidding of their creator or if a specific set of circumstances (dictated by the creator) occurs. Slave thralls are incapable of combat, and any attackers will easily cut them down. The uncontrolled thralls will attack any living beings in their vicinity, seeking only to destroy all life they encounter.

Bane thrall

Dark Shroud (Str): Bane thralls constantly exude a aura of high tangible gloom in a 10-foot radius around them. Those that enter a bane thrall's dark shroud receive a -1 circumstance penalty to all attacks, saves, and checks and cannot regain hit points of ability scores points by any means while within the shroud.
Thralls

Thrall (Skarlock)
Medium-size Undead

Hit Dice: 6d12 (39 hp)
Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 16 (+1 Dex, +5 natural)
Attacks: Slam +3 melee
Damage: Slam 1d6
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
Special Qualities: Undead, +2 turn resistance, spells

Saves: Fort +2, Ref +3, Will +5
Abilities: Str 10, Dex 13, Con —, Int 11, Wis 11, Cha 12
Skills: Climb +6, Concentration +8, Hide +4, Listen +3, Move Silently +6, Search +4, Spellcraft +8, Spot +5
Feats: Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Combat Casting

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Any
Challenge Rating: 4
Alignment: Usually lawful evil
Advancement: 7—9 HD (Medium-size)

Skarlock

Spells: A skarlock can be imbued with the ability to cast any 0–2nd-level spell its creator knows, casting the spell as a 6th-level sorcerer. Any spells imbued are used up once the skarlock casts them and must be re-imbued by their creator.

Sample Skarlock Spell Roster:
0-level: daze, detect magic, floor, mage hand, open/closed, ray of frost.
1st-level: burning hands, cause fear, chill touch, mage armor, magic missile, ray of enfeeblement, shocking grasp.
2nd-level: flaming sphere, Melf's acid arrow, scare, spectral hand, summon swarm.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Thralls are rune-covered undead creatures that are created by necromancers for a variety of foul purposes.
UNCOMMON: Thralls are not the mindless undead that you may believe. Many thralls are given intelligence on par with most living people.
RARE: Some thralls have supernatural abilities and can cast spells like wizards.
OBSCURE: It is thought that if one were to somehow remove the runes from a thrall that it would be rendered inert, but the marks set themselves deeply into flesh and bone.

Treasure

The only treasure commonly found on thralls is that which they carry. This is normally mundane arms and armor, but can be more substantial in that the more intelligent thralls are capable of wielding offensive magic items.
Thralls

Hooks

The PCs are hired to investigate a local necromancer’s abode that seems to be the source of the undead plaguing a nearby settlement and surrounding forest. Unknown to the townsfolk, the necromancer is long dead and his most prized creation, a skarlock, has taken on the role of master of the tower. The skarlock is now gathering the other remaining thralls (mostly warriors and a few lieutenants) about him to destroy the nearby town, for he needs gruesome supplies. Can the PCs defeat this enterprising thrall and his servants before they descend upon the town and destroy its inhabitants?

New Feat

Create Thrall

You can create various forms of thralls.

Prerequisite: Arcane spellcaster level 9th+, access to the animate dead arcane spell.

Benefit:
You can create any thrall whose prerequisites you meet.

Creating a thrall takes one day for each Hit Die the thrall possesses. You must spend 5 XP per hp of the thrall to be created. The material components for thrall creation include, but are not limited to, the dead remains of the being to be animated and an arcane concoction that is used to mark the body with the necessary runes and sigils. These components incur a monetary cost of 5 gp per hit point of the thrall.

You can increase a thrall’s Hit Dice, abilities, and special abilities/qualities by spending an additional XP amount equal to the total XP spent for the base thrall divided by the number of hit dice of the base thrall. The exact effects of increasing or changing a thrall’s special attacks or qualities are subject to the DM’s discretion.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Thrall Type</th>
<th>Prerequisite</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Risen</td>
<td>Caster level 9th</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Slave</td>
<td>Caster level 9th</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warrior</td>
<td>Caster level 10th</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lieutenant</td>
<td>Caster level 10th</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bane thrall</td>
<td>Caster level 11th</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skarlock</td>
<td>Caster level 13th</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Thrull

Large Magical Beast

Hit Dice: 4d10 + 12 (34 hp)

Initiative: +1 (Dex)

Speed: 30 ft., climb 15 ft.

AC: 17 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +7 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +8 melee, bite +6 melee

Damage: Claw 2d4+4, bite 1d8+2 and absorb magic

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.

Special Attacks: Improved grab, absorb magic

Special Saves: Fort +7, Ref +5, Will +4

Abilities: Str 19, Dex 13, Con 17

Skills: Climb +10*, Hide +4, Search +6, Spot +9*

Feats: Multiattack

Climate/Terrain: Usually underground

Organization: Solitary

Challenge Rating: 4

Treasure: Standard

Alignment: Usually neutral

Advancement: 5–8 HD (Large); 9–12 HD (Huge)

---

The thrull is a beast once encountered by a close friend and associate of mine, Mitchel Filkins of the Corvis city watch. One foggy night, Filkins was busy pursuing a known Gerrins errand-boy, who was running a cache of blasting powder filched from a nearby alchemist, when the lad ducked into a sewer inlet. Familiar with the dangers of the Undercity, Filkins hesitated to give chase, but give chase he did. The pursuit endured for some time before the miscreant plunged through a hole rent in the wall of a particularly large tunnel that opened into a large, flooded conduit.

Just as it seemed that Filkins had the malefactor in hand, a terrible thrashing occurred before them in the placid waters of the pool in which they stood hip deep. A great beast erupted from the muck and grabbed hold of the boy. With arms like coiled wood it tore him to shreds, at the same time snatching the small cask the boy had strapped to his back with two tentacle-like appendages protruding from its head. As it smashed the lad’s pulped body into the brickwork of the sewer wall, its tentacles probing all over the cask, gently crushing the wood as if it seemed afraid to spill any of the contents. It appeared to be feeding on the blast powder! Its body heaved in some kind of ecstasy as it (I have come to surmise) absorbed the magic from the powder. This “feeding frenzy” gave Filkins all the time he needed to get the bloody hell out of there.

As he witnessed the beast in sputtering torchlight and he himself was quaking in fear, Filkins could only relate to me the following: it stood a good eight feet tall, perhaps more, and was vaguely reptilian in appearance. Its hide is greenish in color, and the palms of its claws and undersides of its tentacles were covered in saucer-shaped discs. Whether these help the creature in climbing vertical surfaces or might somehow be a part of its feeding process is open to speculation.

This beast should be avoided at all costs. Any sightings should be reported to myself or to one of my university colleagues. It has been seen several times since Filkins’ report, and there are undoubtedly many more left unreported. I sincerely hope that only one of these beasts exists, as the prospect of a nest of such monsters dwelling under our noses is enough to frighten even the boldest among us.

Combat

The thrull attacks primarily to defend its nest, when hunting, or in the presence of magical auras.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the thrull must hit with a claw attack.
Absorb Magic (Su): Upon latching onto its target, the thrullg pulls the victim into its toothy jaws for a bite attack and wraps its tentacles around the victim (if he/she is a spellcaster), or the tentacles search over the victim's entire person looking for a source of magic. Often, if no source is found, the thrullg will purposefully drop the victim in favor of another. This attack has the following effects:

- A magic item with charges in contact with the thrullg's tentacles loses 1d4 charges upon initial contact and every round thereafter.
- A magic item without charges in contact with the thrullg's tentacles will have its powers negated as long as it remains in contact with the tentacles and for 1d4 rounds afterward.
- If a character in contact with a tentacle attempts to use a potion or scroll, the effects do not take effect until 1d4 rounds after the character breaks contact with the tentacle.
- Artifacts do not operate while in contact with the thrullg's tentacles and for 1d4 rounds after breaking contact.
- Spellcasters lose one random prepared spell upon initial contact with the tentacles. Each round the spellcaster remains in contact with the tentacles, they lose an additional random spell.

Skills: The thrullg receives a +3 racial bonus to Spot checks due to its keen eyesight and a +5 racial bonus to Climb checks due to the multitude of suckers on its hands and tentacles.

Treasure

Many interesting items can be found in the thrullg's nest. Nothing magical will ever be found, however, as the thrullg will have already drained all such items. If it is captured or slain, the thrullg itself will garner the attention of scholars and wizards.

Hooks

A wealthy political emissary from abroad has lost an ancient magical artifact, and he believes it to be lost somewhere in the Corvis Undeath. What he doesn't know is that the artifact is resting safely in the depths of the thrullg's gullet, where the thrullg has been feeding off of it like an ever-lusting gobstopper. When the emissary hires the PCs to retrieve it, they find that they'll need to cut the thrullg's belly open to get it out. Good luck and remember to bring a sharp knife.

"Lost my own Anders to that damn thing—popped his head like a cherry, it did, right before my eyes." — Solar, Griffin affair, regarding the thrullg.
In appearance, a tomb maiden resembles an armored human woman, except that the woman is roughly 9 feet tall and constructed of iron. Tomb maidens theoretically are a precursor to the more cunning iron maidens, and they are only found in the most ancient and undisturbed crypts. They fight to protect the contents of said crypt, guarded it with absolute vigilance, often wielding enormous halberds but occasionally employing other large weaponry.

Some time ago, I had the displeasure of encountering one of these constructs in a long forgotten Cygnaran sepulcher. My assistant and I had just penetrated what we thought was the last chamber in a series of dust-choked burial vaults. As I carefully cleared away the dust and cobwebs from what appeared to be the epitaph of Lady Methilde of Llorvaen, a great crack appeared in the wall in which the tribute to the lady had been inscribed. All at once, the wall exploded in a thundering surge of debris, a huge halberd suddenly protruding from the dust and darkness. One swing of that massive polearm, and my assistant, Jek, was impaled. Suspended several feet above me on the end of the maiden’s blade, the poor sod flailed about like a great fish. As the construct began to remove the impaled Jek from the end of its weapon, I took the opportunity to make good my escape. I was not eager to share Jek’s fate. There was quite a bit of running that followed, and eventually I once more saw the light of day. Evidently, the tomb maiden’s pursuit had ended, since it never followed me out of the crypt.

Combat

The tomb maiden’s battle strategy is simple: attack all intruders until they stop moving or leave the maiden’s assigned area. Tomb maidens have the same level of understanding as a common steamjack; they understand the language of their creator, they understand simple instructions, and they have a firm enough grasp on their surroundings to avoid damaging their charges and their charges’ possessions.

Resistances (Ex): Tomb maidens have fire and electrical resistance 20.
Special Healing (Ex): Tomb maidens are not affected by heal spells. Mending cures 1 hp. Fabricate cures 3d8+5 hp. Iron body cures all damage done to a tomb maiden.
Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: Tomb maidens are archaic mechanical constructs created to guard crypts.
RARE: Tomb maidens are ancient predecessors to the far more cunning iron maidens.
OBSCURE: A vanishing breed, most tomb maidens that adventurers encounter have succumbed to the damaging effects of time and rust. A functioning tomb maiden will never leave its assigned area.

Treasure

Though often rusty, a tomb maiden's iron remains may be salvageable. A relatively intact tomb maiden may fetch a hefty sum from collectors or from a university. There is also the matter of the tomb maiden's changes and their interred wealth. Tomb maidens were only utilized as guardians for the most affluent of families, and any who manage to dispatch the maiden will almost certainly have a vast amount of riches at their disposal.

Hooks

A collector or professor from Corvis University hires the PCs to retrieve for him an intact tomb maiden. Their wealthy benefactor wishes to study and/or display the ancient mechanicika construct and will go to any lengths to have the maiden brought back to him. The tomb maiden, however, is not so willing to comply.

When speaking with High Prelate Damuz of Corvis, it recently came to my attention that some associate of his had an encounter with Tomb Maidens in a previously forgotten cogent crypt in the Dragonspine Peaks. These are from a different period of construction than any I have seen personally, and I am quite eager to inspect them myself. I'll need to question these adventuring types and see if I can find that tomb of theirs.
Totem Hunter

Large Monstrous Humanoid

Hit Dice: 10d8+30 (75 hp)
Initiative: +4 (+4 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 15 (-1 size, +4 Dex, +2 natural; plus magical armor)
Attacks: By weapon +12/+7 melee, or 2 claws +12 melee
Damage: By weapon; or claw 1d6+3
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Spells, spell-like abilities, magic items, detect target, cry of the hunter
Special Qualities: Designate target, totem reaping
Saves: Fort +6, Ref +11, Will +11
Abilities:
- Str: 17
- Dex: 18
- Con: 17
- Int: 15
- Wis: 18
- Cha: 15
Skills:
- Concentration +10, Intuit
- Direction +6, Knowledge (arcana) +8, Listen +10, Move Silently +13, Spot +9
- Search +10, Wilderness Lore +7
Feats:
- Alertness, Blind-Fight, Silent Spell, Still Spell, Track
Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary or band (2–5)
Challenge Rating: 11
Alignment: Usually lawful neutral
Advancement: 10–20 HD (Large)

Our parents have told us all stories of stalking boogy men when we were young, and most of us learned to ignore these tales. I wish I could say that such stories were pure fantasy, but there are boogy men out there... and they're hunting us all. No one knows their true name, though they've been dubbed the totem hunters. These foreign beings stalk the world of Caen hunting for trophies to take back to their homeland. Legend would hold these hunters as diabolically evil, but I have found that they are something far worse... they're utterly indifferent. The totem hunter stalks the land like it was a bread basket-hunting man and beast alike, as if they were one and the same.

I am one of the few who has witnessed one of these creatures and lived to speak of it. They are humanoid, but very tall and muscular. Their skin is a dark lavender-blue with white patches, and their heads are bald with long hair. All totem hunters are masters of the mystical arts, and they wield strange magical creations. I have also witnessed with my own eyes their ability to draw power from their victims and turn around and use them all the same. They are expert stalkers, and once they've chosen a target, they don't relent (this I must respectfully say I've also witnessed). However, they do seem to bear an unusual sense of honor and a strong sense of ritual.

Yet there is more to this tale. In my travels I once met a man who claimed to have been to the totem hunters' home city. He said that it was on a continent far to the south of Immoren, and he boasted that he was the only captive ever to escape. The whole place he reported to be a mining operation that funneled into a large, self-contained city. There were many of these creatures there, and the ones known to our realm were very different from many of the others, who seemed only to be simple laborers.

There they practiced strange things, and the man was privy to a bizarre society that was clearly very complex. He did not discover the nature of their hunts in our realm, but he boasted that it was little more than sport to them. He of course claimed to be the ultimate sportsman, in that he outwitted them. However, I must say that this man's testimony was highly suspect, as I discovered him raving insane in an abandoned ruin, and madmen do tell strange tales...

Combat

Totem hunters are cunning and intelligent combatants. They hunt for sport, choosing their targets carefully and pursuing them relentlessly (though never fighting to the death). They hunt either alone or in small packs, and they have been known to make any region their hunting ground and any creature their target (the more challenging, the more appealing). They tend to... rely on their magic items, although once they've begun totem reaping, they will heavily rely on their gained powers. They supplement this with spell use where necessary. Most prey is hunted to the death, although live creatures are occasionally taken. Although they seem to understand Cygnaran (and other dominant humanoid tongues), they never parley or negotiate with a target, even when defeated.

Spells: In addition to their spell-like abilities, all totem hunters have the capabilities of 8th-level wizards. They tend to make their spell selections from the Evocation and Enchantment schools, preferring spells that assist a hunt.

Spell-like Abilities: 3/day—darkness, detect magic, light, mage hand, magic missile, read magic. These abilities are as spells cast by an 8th-level wizard (save DC 14 + spell level).

Magic Items: Totem hunters always hunt equipped with magical items, which may run the full gamut of power. They typically employ at least one form of weapon, one form of armor (usually not a full suit, however), one wand or rod, and any number of other items.

Designate Target (Su): When it embarks on a hunt, the totem hunter designates ahead of time just what it is hunting. This is done by a strange ritual, whereby it writes alien symbols across its chest and armor in its own blood. It has no effect in and of itself, but it designates who or what other abilities will affect. The totem hunter may designate targets simply by race, or they may choose individuals instead. If an individual is targeted, then the totem hunter must know of the individual, and have a good idea of its location; if a racial type is designated, then the hunter need only that it exists and what in general it looks like. The only thing that may shield a creature from this ability is a worn charm (non-magical) crafted from any body part of a totem hunter that the wearer defeated in combat.

Detect Target (Su): At will the totem hunter is able to detect any creature that has been design-nated as a target. It functions identically to detect animals and plants, except that it affects targets only (and is, naturally, not restricted to just animals and plants).

Cry of the Hunter (Su): Totem hunters may release a booming yet shrill cry that inspires terror in any creature designated as a target. It functions identically to fear.

Totem Reaping (Su): The hunter also has the ability to gain strength and additional abilities by beheading targeted victims and upsetting their fading life energy. When embarking on a hunt the totem hunter designates three levels of targets: primary, secondary, and tertiary. The primary target may have any CR, but the secondary target must have a CR of 4 greater than the primary's, and the tertiary must have a CR of 8 greater than the primary's.

There is a fourth level—master totem—but it may be designated at any time during the hunt; its CR must be 12 greater than the primary's.

After the totem hunter kills 3 of the primary targets, it gains a +3 morale bonus to attack, AC, damage, saves, and skill checks; it also gains one of the target's extraordinary, supernatural, or spell-like abilities (within reason; DMS may rule that some may not apply; note that the abilities of PC classes and prestige classes may not be gained). The totem hunter may use this ability just as the original creature did, although it is considered to be fully reseed and recharged for the ability's purposes; the ability is also now considered supernatural regardless of what type it was before.

After the totem hunter kills 9 of its secondary targets it gains an additional +3 morale bonus as well as one of the secondary creature's abilities, just as above. After the totem hunter kills 27 of its tertiary targets (likely a difficult task), it gains an additional +3 morale bonus as well as another ability as above. If the hunter has targeted a master totem, it may now attempt to kill it.

If successful it enters into a state of supreme actualization. It gains no additional morale bonus, however it does retain the use of all (yes, all) extraordinary, supernatural, and spell-like abilities of all (yes, all) of the designated targets it has killed. It then goes on a supreme killing rampage. Should it fail to kill at least 12 creatures of CR level equal to or greater than its master totem, then when it comes down off its high it suffers 8 negative levels as the forces it was manipulating dishonor it (it is generally considered better to die trying than to return unsuccessful and suffer the dishonor and loss of ability). These levels may not be regained.

It should be noted that it is extremely rare for a totem hunter to embark upon a master totem hunt. Most do it only once in their lifetime, and most die in the process. Those that come home successful are revered as supreme icons in their society—the absolute greatest honor a totem hunter can hope to achieve.

These bonuses last for ten days, however this ten day period is renewed each time a designated target is killed. It may be maintained indefinitely, however the totem hunter suffers temporary ability loss of 1 point of Strength for each day past 30. These return at a rate of 1/day once the hunt has ended. Should a hunter kill its master totem, ten days is all it has; it may not be renewed further.

Treasure

The magical items that the totem hunters carry are quite valuable, however the means of recharging them is foreign (thus it can’t be done by common magical means). All items lose their magical qualities within 60 days of the hunter’s death. Despite this, they are quite handy to adventurers in action, and they are valued by scholars interested in studying the foreign craftsmanship.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.
UNCOMMON: Totem hunters are fearless stalkers that commonly hunt humans.
RARE: Totem hunters hunt humans and other creatures for sport. They are intelligent and technologically advanced.
OBSCURE: The totem hunters are effectively sportsmen from a foreign society with a city located on a deep southern continent. They are also known to go on drawn out, grand hunts that last for weeks and span the entire continent and beyond.

Hooks

Totem hunters enjoy great challenges in their hunts and thus often choose adventurers and sometimes even whole adventuring parties as their targets. In such situations, it is usually kill or be killed for the prey, as the totem hunters are unrelenting opponents. Characters may also be enlisted to defend someone targeted by a totem hunter.

This grisly artifact was recovered from, of all places, Ooog! It is (It’s) strong evidence that the totem hunters carry out their ritual hunts within our largest cities as well as woodland areas. The grisly artifact is said to kept in the Sanctuary. These rituals have allegedly become a matter of religious debate, for what reasons I cannot guess.
Trapperkin

Small Fey (Grymkin)

Hit Dice: 5d6+5 (20 hp)
Initiative: +7 (+3 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 20 ft., burrow 5 ft.
AC: 17 (+1 siz, +3 Dex, +3 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +5 melee, bite +0 melee

Damage: Claw 1d4, bite 1d3

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Trapperkin’s croon, trapping ways

Special Qualities: Craft secret way

Saves: Fort +2, Ref +7, Will +5

Abilities: Str 7, Dex 16, Con 12, Int 12, Wis 12, Cha 16

Skills: Bluff +7, Craft (woodworking) +9, Escape Artist +7, Hide +11, Move Silently +6, Perform (chant) +11, Search +5, Spot +5

Feats: Improved Initiative, Weapon Finesse (bite), Weapon Finesse (claw)

Climate/Terrain: Any

Organization: Solitary, gang (2–4), or coven (5–10)

Challenge Rating: 5

Alignment: Always neutral evil

Advancement: 6–10 HD (Small)

Khador is a rough place with a rich culture. The people there respect the supernatural with an awe and reverence that we often forget in kingdoms like Cygnar. During my travels through Khador I studied the grymkin with a Tzaddil by the name of Vlad Szechta. Tzaddili are basically travelling teachers, with a mix of priest and warrior thrown in for good measure. The knowledge he imparted to me has saved my skin more than once when dealing with the grymfolk. It was while under his tutelage that I first encountered the trapperkin.

During our travels we came upon a village that was having a serious problem. Czebrece it was called, a fishing village close to the border of Khador and Khadav. Tragically, a half dozen of the village’s children had gone missing in the space of two months, snatched away while the village was asleep. One child’s locker had been found in a stream near the woods. In another case a strange doll was left behind in a baby’s crib. The village elders suspected a witch or demon. But then Vlad and I found the tunnels.

Trapperkin use cleverly crafted trap doors to sneak into homes. They can riddle a village with tunnels that lead to each door. The grymkin use these passages to travel freely and unseen, as well as to transport captured victims. Although nearly undetectable, we found one with the use of magic. The tunnels proved to us that a trapperkin was responsible for the missing children.

By the time we had tracked it down, we both had scratches and bruises from its various traps. Twice its snares nearly cost me my life, and Tzaddil Vlad almost lost a hand. We killed it, but tragically it was too late for the children. You see, it eats what it steals.

The trapperkin has a rat-like face, with beady black eyes and sharp buckteeth. They’re usually hunchbacks, standing two to three feet tall. Older stories and rhymes warn that their claws can cut moonlight, and their teeth are made of iron. I know for a fact its bite is damn sharp, though its teeth are not actually iron.

Their dens are usually small hut-like structures, dug under the boles of trees, buildings, or in tunnels and warrens. Trapperkin in a city might take advantage of small crawlspaces or abandoned sections of buildings. Their dens are gruesome places, past pantry and part trophy room, all full with the smell of death.
Trapperkin

Combat

Trapperkin prefer to use stealth and guile to invade a community. This breed of grymkin will kidnap children in the midst of the night as they croon a song of sleep. On occasion one may leave a crude effigy of the child behind. These are made from carved wood, rotten hair, broken dolls, and bits of bone.

If pressed into direct combat, a trapperkin will not hold back. It will employ every trick at its disposal, leading pursuers through every trap it has, fighting viciously if it has to. It uses its speed to its advantage and attacks the eyes and hands of its opponents.

Trapperkin's Croon (Su): The trapperkin's soft lullaby transforms regular sleep into a deeper sleep that one cannot be roused from. It has an 80-foot area of affect. Sleepers may make a single Will save (DC 16) to maintain a regular sleep. If they fail, they cannot be roused from sleep by any means (including taking damage) for 1d4 hours. The trapperkin must make a successful Perform roll (DC 15 + total levels of creatures affected) in order to use this ability. Anyone who is awake simply hears a soft crooning, pleasant to the ears.

Trapping Ways (Sp): 2/day—detect sneaks and pits, entangle, invisibility to animals, pass without trace; 1/day—snare, spike growth, weed shingle. These are as the spells cast by a 5th-level druid (save DC 13 + spell level).

Craft Secret Way (Su): Doors shaped by the trapperkin are incredibly hard to detect (DC 25). These doors can be affected by any spells that affect or detect doors or portals. Only trapperkin may open them without magic, although the doors can be destroyed to reveal the passages beyond. They have the same hardness and properties as the wall or floor they are part of.

Treasure

The effigies crafted by a trapperkin are macabre forms of payment. Within the hollow belly of a trapperkin doll is a shimmering pearl-like stone worth 100 to 1000 gp. The pearl has to be torn out, and the doll emits a small whimpering cry as this is done.

A trapperkin paw will grant a +10 aptitude bonus to Search checks to find secret doors on a single person once per month. The hand has to be properly treated and cured. The Craft Wondrous Item feat, 125 gp, and 25 XP are required to do this. These paws are worth 500 gp.

Hooks

A noble family's young daughter has been stolen away while she slept. Many indications point to this as an act by a rival family, but something doesn't add up. No ransom has been offered, and no acknowledgement of the deed has been made. In fact, the rival family seems to be missing a child as well. The children, who are actually held in a trapperkin lair, do not have much time left. It is up to the characters to discover the true nature of their abduction and save them before it is too late.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The trapperkin hunts children. It eats them and makes leather from their skin.
Trolls

Troll: Large Monstrous Humanoid (Troll)

- Hit Dice: $5d8+35$ (57 hp)
- Initiative: +3 (+3 Dex)
- Speed: 40 ft.
- AC: 18 (-1 siz, +3 Dex, +6 natural)
- Attacks: 2 slams +10 melee, bite +5 melee; or Huge greataxe +10 melee
- Damage: Slam $1d6+6$, bite $1d8+3$, or Huge greataxe $2d8+9$
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
- Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., poison resistance 10, regeneration 7, scent, spawn vohelps
- Saves: Fort +10, Ref +7, Will +2
- Abilities: Str 22, Dex 16, Con 24,
  Int 7, Wis 6, Cha 8
- Skills: Hide +4, Intimidate +4,
  Listen +3, Spot +3
- Feats: Endurance, Great Fortitude

Special Qualities: Darkvision 30 ft., poison resistance 5, regeneration 4, scent

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Solitary or gang (2–6)

Challenge Rating: 3

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: 4–6 HD (Medium-size)

Welp, Immature: Small Monstrous Humanoid (Troll)

- Hit Dice: $1d8+3$ (7 hp)
- Initiative: +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)
- Speed: 20 ft.
- AC: 14 (+1 Dex, +3 natural)
- Attacks: 2 claws +4 melee; or bite +4 melee
- Damage: Claw $1d4+3$, bite $1d4+3$
- Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.
- Special Qualities: Darkvision 30 ft., poison resistance 3, regeneration 3, scent
- Saves: Fort +3, Ref +3, Will +1
- Abilities: Str 17, Dex 13, Con 16,
  Int 4, Wis 4, Cha 6
- Skills: Hide +5, Spot +1
- Feats: Improved Initiative

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Solitary or gang (2–6)

Challenge Rating: 1

Alignment: Usually neutral evil

Advancement: Mature vohelp
O
f all the creatures I've had the pleasure of studying in the Iron Kingdoms, trolls have been some of the most interesting. Even as a boy, where most people saw only a race of dim-witted brutish barbarians, I saw a complex and highly developed social creature. I remember the pygmy trolls that I studied and even briefly fell in with before venturing off to become a ranger in the military. The things stink like the depths of Urcaen, but wallowing in the mud as an adopted member of their clan was something I'll never forget.

There are many more breeds out there, however, than just those simple pygmy trolls. They are found in all parts of Caen, having adapted to virtually every climate. There are four primary species of troll, with many related sub-species, and one major species of "untroll," so to speak, that bears mentioning as well.

The most civilized form of troll is the trollkin, and they boast a level of refinement that I doubt any other trolls will reach. Although many of our cultures are prejudiced towards them, I have found them capable of a peaceful coexistence with most other peoples—a peace that the trollkin are sometimes denied out of that prejudice. I once survived a brawl with legendary trollkin commander Baldemar Berg, and in my youth I was entrenched by the angelic singing of the trollkin performer Felda Krunadra, who sang at a pub near the university. Both were greater legends than many I have met among human lands.

The most basic family unit is the kith, and most trollkin societies are clans, which is a collection of related kiths. Several neighboring clans make up a krell, which is ruled over by the elder kith, more formally called the Circle of Stones. Most trollkin speak a dialect of Molgar called Molgar-trul, although their increase in trade has prompted them to adopt human tongues, such as Cygnaran, as well.

Among trolls and dire trolls, one seldom finds true clans and never a krell (although related kiths still band together in times of strife). When among pygmy trolls, one is always dealing with a clan. Most other trolls simply speak Molgar-trul.

Trollkin boast one other notable sociological feature—the trollshen. The closest word for translating this would be brotherhood or perhaps fellowship. In its base form, it is a band of male trolls who have yet to establish their own kiths, although in modern trollkin society these have become far more refined and developed. Most trollshen are accepted parts of the community, providing communal living for their members and selling some kind of service such as carpentry or stone working.

Unfortunately some of these fraternities are composed of thugs and hoodlums, and these trollkin gangs are the scourge of the roads in some areas (and have earned trollkin an undeserved bad reputation among some neighboring cultures).

Bloodline is of paramount importance to any troll. Trollkin have by far the cleanest records of and make the most distinction between their bloodlines, and one will find that most clans consist of a single bloodline. Intermarriages do occur, but not in any fashion mankind is used to. Trollkin also have a practice of blood-bonding, called lugal, whereby they make a cut in one's hand, then one in their own, and bring the two together so that the two individuals become blood brothers. This bond causes slight physiological changes in the recipient that other trollkin can pick up on (by scent, taste—yes they will pick you up and lick your arm—as well as a general feel). This bond is granted rarely, though the recipient is honored as a full member of the krell once it is. I can speak of this bond firsthand, as I received it for the services I did a dear trollkin friend and his kith. The fellowship it has brought me has saved my life on several occasions (and gotten me invited to a number of rauchose family feasts as well, let me tell you).

Trolls and dire trolls trace their bloodlines through the passing on of bloodstones, which are simply family heirlooms bearing their blood name (signified usually by a single rune), although in recent years I have seen many turn to denoting their bloodlines through ancestral tattoos—a common behov
Trolls

Dire Troll

Huge Monstrous Humanoid (Troll)

Hit Dice: 11d8+110 (159 hp)
Initiative: +3 (+3 Dex)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 21 (-2 size, +3 Dex, +10 natural)
Attacks: Gargantuan greataxe
+17/+12/+7 melee or rock +12 ranged Damage: Gargantuan greataxe 2d12+12, rock 2d6+8
Face/Reach: 10 ft. by 5 ft./15 ft.
Special Qualities: Darkvision 90 ft., poison resistance 15, regeneration 15, scent, spawn whelps
Saves: Fort +13, Ref +10, Will +4
Abilities: Str 27, Dex 16, Con 30, Int 5, Wis 5, Cha 10
Skills: Intimidate +12, Listen +5, Spot +5
Feats: Cleave, Great Cleave, Power Attack

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Solitary or pair, plus 1–4 whelps
Challenge Rating: 11
Alignment: Usually chaotic evil

Trolls are renowned for their regeneration powers. Even pygmy trolls can be difficult to put down if one is ill-prepared. They also have the unique ability to spawn “whelps,” or degenerate trolls, that will grow from a severed member, and there’s a chance that one will be found accompanied by several of these whelps at any given time. All trolls are also renowned for their resistance to poisons, and only a madman would eat a troll’s cooking. While they might cook toadstools up to look tasty, let me tell you, they are hell on the way down (and worse on the way out—ouch!).

The last noteworthy thing I should mention is a troll’s ravenous appetite. Trolls are always hungry, and most of their time and energy is spent trying to fill their bellies. This hunger can weaken their judgment a great deal. Even the trollkin, who are far more even-tempered than their brutish cousins, are known for their gregarious feasts and the many meals they eat per day.

Combat

Troll Qualities

All trolls have the following abilities, except where otherwise noted.

Regeneration (Ex): All trolls have exceptional regenerative powers. Each type of troll takes standard damage only from a few types of attacks, and they have a numerical regeneration level (MM). Troll body parts, however, do not decay; they instead form into whelps (see below), but only from a reasonably intact limb.

Poison Resistance (Ex): All trolls are resistant to poison to a certain degree. This resistance is expressed in a numerical value similar to damage reduction. When stat damage is rolled to determine the effects of the poison, the poison resistance is subtracted from that number. Thus, if a troll had a poison resistance of 5, and it ate a poison that affected subjects with 1d4 Con damage, then the troll would be unaffected. If it ate a poison that did 1d6 Con damage, it might take 1 point of Con damage if 6 were rolled. Multiple poisons affecting a troll simultaneously are rolled separately (i.e., do not accumulate to beat the resistance); neither are primary and secondary damage cumulative (subtract the resistance separately from each roll). If the poison is of a type that does not do stat damage (for example, a type that induces unconsciousness), the troll receives a bonus to its Fortitude save equal to its poison resistance.

Spawn Whelps (Su): The intact severed body parts of most trolls grow into miniature trolls known as whelps. These trolls are degenerate and are not as powerful as a true troll; they are always subject to the commands of their progenitor.
Most whelps have fairly short lifespans, although this too varies per type. See the troll whelp entry for stats and the individual troll entry for additional specifications.

Standard Trolls

These are the typical brutish trolls that one can find in just about any livable climate on Caen. Exceptionally adaptable, trolls are clever and hardy creatures. They lack the rigid society of trolikin, usually being found alone or in a kith. They will tolerate other trolls, if passingly, but are hostile to most other creatures. Trolls are branty behemoths, standing as much as 10 feet tall, and filling it out with lean muscle. Their skin tone ranges with earthy greenish tones being the most common. Of course, their most notable feature is their hideousness.

Combat

Trolls are universally furious in combat. At times they can be difficult to arouse, but once they commit to a battle, they see it through. Despite their rage, they are somewhat clever, employing strategy that most underestimate them of. Most trolls use weapons, and many wear piecemeal or leather armor, although seldom of crafted metal.

Fears: Standard trolls (and pitch and winter trolls) receive Great Fortitude as a bonus feat.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and acid deal normal damage to a troll. They regrow severed members within 6d6 minutes.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Standard trolls have a 20% chance of being accompanied by 1d4 whelps, half of which will be mature. These whelps grow from severed body parts into immature whelps in 1d4 days and into mature whelps in 1d4 weeks. They typically die within 4d6 months. When times are lean, trolls often eat their whelps.

Surfaces

Winter Trolls

Winter trolls are a breed of white-skinned troll adapted to extremely cold climates. They are far more sluggish than typical trolls and are generally the least hungry of all breeds, including trolikin. Winter trolls love freezing their food, often while it's still alive, in blocks of ice to dine on later. They are identical to standard trolls, except as noted here.

In combat, winter trolls will usually command their whelps to attack first, and once they begin a melee they tend to open with their ice breath, followed by melee combat.

Cold Subtype (Ex): See MM.

Ice Breath (Su): Winter trolls can breathe a stream of frigid cold 5 feet high, 5 feet wide, and 20 feet long once every 1d6 rounds. All opponents struck by it take 3d4 cold damage, although a Reflex save (DC 15) may be attempted for half damage. As a full-round action, the troll may sweep the breadth in a 180° arc; however, the Reflex save DC is 10.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and acid deal normal damage to winter trolls. They regrow severed members in 1d4 hours.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Winter trolls whelps have the cold subtype; they are otherwise identical to standard troll whelps.

Pitch Trolls

Pitch trolls, also known as fire trolls, are a breed of troll typically deep burgundy in color that are found in extremely hot areas. They are considered hyperactive compared to other trolls, and subsist on a larger diet, though they are
Pygmy Troll

Small Humanoid (Troll)

Hit Dice: 1d8+1 (5 hp)

Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)

Speed: 20 ft.

AC: 15 (+1 size, +1 Dex, -3 natural)

Attacks: Stone axe +0 melee; or shortspear +1 ranged

Damage: Stone axe 1d4-1; shortspear 1d8-1

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Qualities: Poison resistance 3, regeneration 2, spawn whelps

Saves: Fort +3, Ref +1, Will +0

Abilities: Str 8, Dex 13, Con 13,

Int 8, Wis 10, Cha 8

Skills: Hide +10, Listen +4, Move Silently +2, Spot +4

Feats: Alertness

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground

Organization: Kith (4-10), clan (11-40), great clan (80-160)

Challenge Rating: 1

Alignment: Usually chaotic neutral

Advancement: 2-5 HD (Small)

---

Less picky in what they eat (which is to say that they'll eat absolutely anything). They are identical to standard trolls, except as noted here.

Pygmy trolls tend to shun combat more than most breeds, preferring to bound upon their foes by throwing rocks or sending whelps after them rather than attacking outright. When in melee they tend to rely on their bite more than other breeds, and their bite damage is 1d10+3.

Fire Subtype (Ex): See MM.

Regeneration (Ex): Acid and cold attacks deal normal damage to a pitch troll. They regrow severed members in 2d6 rounds.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Pitch trolls frequently (60% of the time) are accompanied by 1-2 mature whelps and 1d10 immature whelps. The number is higher because they will actually cut off their own body parts to keep a staple of whelps around that serves as an alternate food source. Their whelps have the fire subtype. Except where noted here, they are identical to standard troll whelps.

Stench (Ex): By releasing powerful and horrid belches a pitch troll can produce a terrible stench. All non-trolls within 20 feet must make a Fortitude save (DC 19) or become nauseous, effectively suffering 1d4 temporary Strength damage for the next 12 rounds. Other species of troll are disturbed by this odor, but are not adversely affected by it.

---

Whelps

Whelps are the degenerate offspring of trolls. They are fairly similar, even across breeds, and they do not gain the special abilities of their progenitors, except where noted otherwise. For the most part they are stupid and simply do as they are commanded. If left to their own devices, whelps simply go about feeding, fleeing from any major threat. Whelps are sometimes eaten by their creators when times are lean.

Regeneration (Ex): Whelps take normal damage identically to their progenitors. Their severed limbs do not regrow.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Whelps cannot spawn further whelps.

---

Dire Troll

Dire trolls are the largest of all trolls. They grow to a massive 18 feet in height, and they boast a temperament to make that size something to fear. They are solitary creatures, typically found alone or as a mated pair with several whelps. Above all they prefer to be left alone, and unless one bears food, a conflict can be expected. The only creatures they are known to tolerate are pygmy trolls, though a regular bounty of food must be provided. Dire trolls have incredible lifespans, reaching as much as 300 years, though they tend to reproduce far less than most trolls.

Commensal

Dire trolls are not incredibly intelligent, but are smart enough to employ weapons—massive ones. They usually attack... head-out, once their anger has been stoked, and they seldom retreat unless mortally wounded.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and acid do normal damage to a dire troll. They regrow severed members in 1d4 hours.

Skills: *Dire trolls gain a +4 racial bonus to Intimidate.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Dire trolls produce only mature whelps, and they are typically (70% of the time) accompanied by 1d4 of them. These whelps grow in 2d6 days, and they live for 1d4 years. Those encountered with a dire troll typically have greater than usual HD.

Pygmy Trolls

Pygmy trolls are stunted little creatures that average around 3 to 4 feet in height. They share many of the traits of their larger cousins, but are far weaker. Despite this, they are clever little things that go underestimated by most civilized races.
Their social structure is a lot more muddled than most trolls;
most pygmies simply live in large clans. They tend to occupy abandoned caves or even buildings, although those that live in crude huts in the goony mud flats are among the better known.

Most civilized races consider pygmy trolls a nuisance and will chase them off when they intrude upon their lands.
Most troll breeds, however, put up with pygmy trolls and may even employ them for simple tasks. Generally speaking, pygmy trolls are the least hostile to other creatures,
although they can certainly represent a threat.

Combat

A lone pygmy troll is anything but formidable; however, pygmy trolls always attack in groups. They are surprisingly capable of swarming opponents and even setting snares
and traps for them.

They typically use crude weapons and spear. Pygmy troll whelps spawn and die extremely quickly.

Pygmies will times create whelps

to boost their numbers before
combat.

Regeneration (Ex): Fire and acid do normal damage to dire trolls. They regrow limbs in 3d4 rounds.

Spawn Whelps (Ex): Pygmy trolls may only produce immature whelps. They grow to full strength in 3d4 rounds, but die after 2d4 hours. Additionally, they have all of the following statistical modifiers (same as immature whelp above, except where noted here): CR 1/2; small humanoid; HD
1d8+1; hp 5; Init +5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative); Spd 30 ft.; AC 14 (+1 size, +1 Dex, +2 natural); Atk 2 claws +1 melee (+1 size); (1d4), bite +0 melee (1d6); AL CN; SV Fort +3, Ref +1, Will -4; Str 10, Dex 13, Con 13, Int 3, Wis 3, Cha 3; Skills; Hide +5; Feats: Improved Initiative. They gain none of the special abilities or qualities of regional subspecies (see below).

Subspecies

Rock Troll

Rock trolls are pygmies that live in barren rocky areas.
They possess the unique ability to blend in with rocky surroundings, which they use to surprising efficiency. They are identical to standard pygmy trolls, except where noted.

Rock trolls favor stealth in combat, and they will stalk prey for great lengths of time before they reveal themselves and attack.

Camouflage (Ex): Due to pigments in their skin, rock trolls can blend invisibly into any normal rocky surface. They gain a +12 racial modifier to Hide checks under these circumstances.

Burrow Troll

Burrow trolls are pygmies native to desert climes. They possess a knack for burrowing underneath of sand and other loose soil. They are identical to pygmy trolls, except where noted.

In combat burrow trolls favor swarming-
Trolls

Black Troll

Large Undead (Troll)

Hit Dice: 7d12 (45 hp)
Initiative: +1 (+1 Dex)
Speed: 30 ft.
AC: 19 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +9 natural)
Attacks: 2 claws +8 melee, bite +3 melee; or by weapon +8
Damage: Claw 2d4+6, bite 1d8+3; or by weapon
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Blood drain, feculent decay, command whales, touch of corruption, troll bane
Special Qualities: Blood dependency, regeneration
Saves: Fort +2, Ref +3, Will +7
Abilities: Str 22, Dex 12, Con —
Int 13, Wis 15, Cha 14
Skills: Hide +7, Intimidate +11, Listen +10, Move Silently +9, Spot +10, Wilderness Lore +9
Feats: Cleave, Power Attack, Sunder

Climate/Terrain: Any land and underground
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 8
Alignment: Always chaotic evil
Advancement: 8—15 HD (Large)

Burrowing (Ex): Burrow trolls have a burrow speed of 5 feet in addition to their normal movement. They gain a racial bonus of +4 to Move Silently checks while burrowing, and they also gain a +8 racial bonus to Intuit Direction checks when burrowing.

Vine Troll

Vine trolls are pygmies indigenous to tropical areas. They have adapted to life in the trees and are very skilled climbers. They are well known for their poisonous bite. Vine trolls are the most aggressive of all pygmy trolls, actively harassing and attacking trespassers until they leave the pygmies’ area. They are identical to pygmy trolls, except where noted.

In combat, vine trolls favor stealth and guerilla tactics. They will follow opponents for miles, harrying them with darts, spears, and whelp until they leave.

Climb (Ex): Vine trolls have a climb speed of 30 feet. They apply their Dexterity modifier to Climb checks, and they receive a +6 racial bonus to these checks.

Poison Bite (Ex): Anyone bitten by a vine troll becomes envenomed (save DC 12), receiving initial damage of 1d4-1, temporary Strength and secondary damage of 1d4 temporary Constitution.

Black Trolls

Black trolls are the most despised of all trolls. They are undead abominations that are twisted mockery of other trolls. Trollkin especially revile black trolls, and their legends claim that they are born of a tainted bloodline—thus their dependency on the fluid. All black trolls are solitary creatures that live only to torment others. They commonly raid troll and human settlements alike, murdering and pillaging as they go. They delight in stealing command of other trolls’ whelps and turning them upon their masters.

Consort

In combat black trolls are shifty and clever. They will try to isolate opponents, slaying them one by one. Any survivors will be kidnapped and added to the black troll’s feeding stock.

Regeneration (Ex): A black troll’s regeneration abilities function even in death, however they are diminished. Fire and acid do normal damage to a black troll. Searing limbs do not regrow, but still may be reattached as usual.

Blood Dependency (Ex): Black trolls must drink no less than 3 pints of blood every day. For each day they fail to consume this amount, they suffer 1 point of cumulative temporary Strength damage to a maximum of -5. They usually keep a “loan” of humanoid hostages for feeding when they can.

Note that they are not restricted to drinking humanoid blood.
though they prefer it (trollkin blood is the most favored).

Blood Drain (Ex): On a successful grapple attempt, a black troll may drain the blood of its opponent. Victims suffer 1d4 temporary Constitution damage each round the pin is maintained. Any troll species bitten by this attack suffers 1d4 permanent Constitution damage each round. Any troll (excluding pygmies) killed by a black troll in this manner rises as black trolls within one week. The black troll has no control over this spawn, and they seldom kill other trolls in this manner.

Command Whelps (Su): Black trolls do not produce whelps as other trolls do. However, they may possess the whelps of other trolls. To do this they make a command check, just as an evil cleric would versus undead (PH). Any rebuffing success is ignored (whelps may not be rebuffed), however if command success is rolled, then the whelps fall under the command of the black troll. The same HD restrictions apply. If the whelps are in immediate presence of their progenitor, then they may make a Will save (DC 16) to avoid becoming possessed. Whelps commanded in such a fashion begin to rot and decay, losing 1 point of Constitution every day until they die.

Feculent Decay (Ex): A black troll, despite its regeneration, is in a constant state of decay. This visage is quite unsettling. Creatures with less HD than the black troll who witness this must make a Will save (DC 16) or become shaken for 2d6 rounds. Other breeds of trolls are not affected by this ability.

Touch of Corruption (Su): As a standard action, a troll may cause the rotting flesh on its body to expand and whip forth as a ghastly tentacle to make a touch attack versus a single target to a range of 20 feet. If successful, the victim is affected by contact poison (save DC 16) that deals 3d4 initial Strength damage and 1d6 secondary Strength damage. Any damage done to these flesh members during the attack does not harm the black troll.

Trollbane (Ex): All physical attacks made by a black troll versus any other species of troll do normal damage to the target, ignoring their regeneration.

Trollkin

Trollkin are the most advanced of all trolls. While not as technologically learned, they are as civilized as most.

Their culture is rich and diverse with a very strong heritage based upon bloodlines. In temperament, trollkin are the most even-handed of all trolls, however, they still tend to be aloof and sometimes even hostile towards most outside cultures. This originates in their condescending attitude towards non-trolls for having weak blood, but it is also due in large part towards the discrimination they are often shown. Most trollkin clans and krell are located on the fringes of society with few major concentrations being located between the Thornwood and the Bloodstone Marches, southwest of Ios, and in Cygaur south of the Wyrmwall Mountains. There are also minor concentrations scattered here and there, such as near Obik in Khedan; and there are quite a few of them on the Isle of Cyza.

Trollkin are about the size of large humans in build and have a lumbering way about them. Their skin is gray with touches of blue and green. There is a bit of variation across the bloodlines in appearance, points of distinction that individuals take pride in. Despite their bulky size, trollkin have remarkable voices, and females are known for their incredible singing, while males (at least the males of particular bloodlines) are known for their dreaded fell calling.

Trollkin don't have the technical acumen of humans or even gobblers, although they have taken to using machinery frequently in their lives. They are known for their stoneworking skill, although they lack the refined artistic and engineering abilities of elves or dwarves, who both Trollkin work as second rate. Despite its plain and even coarse appearance, trollkin stone work is extremely affordable and noted for its durability. Trollkin labor has come to be recognized as cheap and dependable, and trollkin are slowly becoming more integrated into industrial society.
Trolls

Combat

Trollkin take to combat in many ways. They almost always utilize weapons, and if a member of a kith or other unit, will employ clever teamwork. They are known for their toughness and the quickness with which they shrug off a blow.

Improved Healing (Ex): Trollkin do not have regeneration. Instead, they heal at twice the normal rate. If they feast considerably while resting, this healing rate rises to three times the normal rate. They also receive a +4 racial bonus to save versus poison and +2 versus disease. Additionally, they still regenerate lost limbs, though at a reduced rate. A severed limb that is surgically reattached will heal within 1d6+1 days. A lost limb will regrow within 2d20+30 days. They die as normal if reduced to -10 hp.

Toughness (Ex): All trollkin are able to shrug subdual damage off easily. The first X points of subdual damage (where X equals the trollkin’s Constitution modifier) from any attack is ignored. This ability protects against subdual damage from hazardous environments as well, although in these cases damage may never be reduced below 1.

Trollkin Characters

For more on trollkin as player characters, consult the playable race appendix (pp.236).

Treasure

Standard Trolls

Trolls are known to keep any variety of treasure in their lair. They are intelligent enough to recognize basic valuables, and many will hoard such items. Sometimes they will trade these goods for food.

Troll blood is a common component in some magical formulae, and it typically sells for 15–30 gp per ounce. Troll body parts may be worth even more to a magician looking to craft items that grant regenerative or poison-resisting powers; a severed limb will usually sell for as much as 200 gp.

Dire Trolls

Dire trolls keep less treasure than standard trolls, but have a penchant for hoarding gold. They keep this to themselves and tend not to trade it as other trolls do. They usually keep it well hidden.

Their blood is worth even more to those wishing to craft magical items or concoctions that grant strength or fortitude; it might sell for 50–100 gp an ounce. Antidotes that utilize dire troll blood as a component are among the best available and sell for three to four times their normal value.
Pygmy Trolls

Pygmy trolls rarely have anything of value in their lairs, unless it has been acquired by happenstance (usually considered half standard treasure).

Pygmy troll dung can be used as a crude fuel in lamps (it is too corrosive for machines), and it surprisingly burns odorless. Underdescendant, only those who can afford better fuels use it.

Black Trolls

Black trolls disdain hoarding valuables, unless they have been stolen from another troll. They do prefer magical weapons, and will utilize them if they can find them. (Ignore treasure rolls that do not result in magical weapons.)

The blood of a black troll is a spell component prized by necromancers. If used as a material component in the casting of a Necromancy spell, the caster may add +4 to the DC to save versus the spell, or he may lower one level the cost to any one metamagic feat for purposes of that one casting; in either case the blood is consumed in the casting.

Alternatively, one may drink the blood of a black troll to gain certain benefits, at a cost. Consuming a single dose grants the recipient poison resistance of 10 and regeneration of 5 (fire and acid do normal damage; limbs regrow in 4d6 minutes) for one day. However, the recipient suffers one negative level and temporary Wisdom and Charisma damage of -4, as well as a case of extreme insatiable hunger. While the benefits wear off after a day, the penalties persist for 1d4 additional days, at which time they wear off.

Trollkin

Trollkin treasure runs the gamut, but usually depends upon the wealth and status of the individual trollkin. Their blood does not benefit arcane smiths as does that of other trolls.
Urthek

Large Beast

Hit Dice: 5d10 + 20 (47 hp)

Initiative: +2 (+2 Dex)

Speed: 40 ft.

AC: 19 (-1 size, +2 Dex, +8 natural)

Attacks: 2 claws +9 melee; bite +4 melee

Damage: Claws 1d8 + 7; bite 1d6 + 3

Face/Reach: 3 ft. by 3 ft./10 ft.

Special Attacks: Poison

Special Qualities: Stench, link with fungi

Saves: Fort +8, Ref +6, Will +1

Abilities: Str 25, Dex 14, Con 18,
Int 9, Wis 10, Cha 10

Skills: Hide +7, Jump +10, Listen +2, Move Silently +3, Search +2, Spot +5

Climate/Terrain: Any forest

Organization: Solitary or pair

Challenge Rating: 6

Alignment: Always chaotic evil

Advancement: 6–10 HD (Large); 11–15

You never forget the smell of an urthek. The fetid, overpowering odor seems to cling for weeks to clothes and skin and hair. Get too close to one and you may even find yourself losing your lunch.

Of course, it’s difficult to forget the creatures at all once you’ve met one. Great shaggy beasts, they are, standing fully 9 feet tall and half as wide. Beady little black eyes peer out from under their gray, matted fur, which hangs in clumps tangled with filth and debris.

Their wide mouths are lined with dozens of teeth, and their thick fingers are tipped with wicked claws longer than a man’s finger. These claws are hollow and filled with a paralytic poison.

The urthek seem to gather in the most ancient, darkest recesses of the woods, where great towering mushrooms grow and the bogs and bogs teem with decay. While it seems foolish to seek out such a nasty beast, there are those who hunt and trap the creatures for their pelts. I have seen a properly cured urthek coat, and I must admit it is a fine, luxurious garment that shimmers in the sun.

Employing one intrepid pelter hunter as a guide, a daring, if only partially sane, individual by the name of Tomas Synag, I settled into the tedious task of stalking the urthek. Making our way around the alien trunks of towering mushrooms, it required every ounce of stealth and expertise we could muster to avoid alerting any nearby urthek to our presence. Peering from beneath the cap of a partially rotten giant toadstool, I saw the hulking form of an urthek hunched beneath a particular virulent looking green fungus. As I watched, the creature proceeded to reach up carefully and thrust its taloned paws into the gills of the fungus, a cloud of almost florescent spores greeting its intrusion. A look of bizarre rapture seemed to cross the face of the urthek, a hideous sight made all the more foul as the creature twitched and swayed slightly as if drugged, a flocking of pale green foam around its glistening mouth. It was then that I noticed the deep raw wound in the creature’s thigh, a wound that seemed to be edged with a green tinge and closing before my eyes. In some remarkable way, this monstrosity was using some kind of symbiotic link with the fungus to heal itself, and by all accounts the creatures seemed to derive pleasure from the act. Much to my horror and disgust, it was then that I noticed the actions of the fungus itself and the smaller ones at the urthek’s feet, each was pulsating and twisting slightly, gills fluttering, as if sharing the urthek’s pleasure.

I left then and did not return.
Combat

Urthek strike with their hollow claws, hoping to paralyze prey with their venom. Once the prey is immobilized and there is no further threat, the urthek will devour it at their leisure.

Stench (Ex): Any creature within five feet of an urthek with the ability to smell must make a Fortitude save (DC 16) or make all attacks and saving throws at -2. Creatures with the scent special ability save at -4. Creatures with no living metabolism are not affected.

Poison (Ex): The hollow claws of an urthek contain a powerful paralyzing agent (Fortitude save, DC 16) that causes 2d6 points of temporary Strength damage and 1d6 secondary Strength damage. It can use this ability once per hour with each claw.

Link with Fungi (Su): The urthek can attune its body to a patch (minimum 10 by 10 feet) of mushrooms, mold, or other fungi. While in contact with the fungi it heals 1d3 hp per round.

Treasure

The paralyzing poison of an urthek is worth 300 gp per dose on the black market. Each creature contains 1d4 doses of the toxin at any given time. A complete urthek pelt is worth 400 gp if undamaged, but only to a furrier with the capability of weaving it into its powerful stench (Craft [furrier] check, DC 20).

Uncommon: Urthek like to ambush their prey, but one can sometimes detect a hidden urthek by their smell, which has been likened to rotting vegetation.

Rare: Urthek pelts, when properly cured, make very fine coats.

Obscure: Urthek can somehow regenerate when in contact with a patch of fungus.

Legends & Lore

Common: The urthek is a horrible creature found near mushroom patches in the darkest reaches of the forest.
Vektiss

Medium-size Aberration

Hit Dice: 4d8+4 (22 hp)
Initiative: +7 (+3 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)

Speed: 40 ft., climb 30 ft., swim 20 ft., burrow 5 ft.

AC: 18 (+3 Dex, +5 natural)

Attacks: Bite +5 melee, 2 claws +0 melee

Damage: Bite 2d4+2, claw 1d4+1

Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./5 ft.

Special Attacks: Implant egg, poison

Special Qualities: Shadow shroud, locate egg

Saves: Fort +2, Ref +4, Will +6

Abilities: Str 15, Dex 17, Con 12, Int 4, Wis 14, Cha 10

Skills: Climb +14, Hide +8, Listen +5, Spot +4, Swim +10

Feats: Improved Initiative

Climate/Terrain: Temperate or warm forest, mountains, or underground

Organization: Pack (6–24); pack will include a number of younger vektiss (1–3 HD) that are still capable combatants, as well as several stronger and larger ones (5–8 HD).

Challenge Rating: 5

Alignment: Always neutral

Advancement: 5–8 HD (Large)

When my senior assistant, Lynus, learned of a peculiar arthropod that had been killing loggers near Olkh in Khador, we decided to investigate.

While examining the site of a recent attack, several man-sized insectoid creatures leapt from the trees and attacked Lynus, taking him by surprise. We rushed to help, but one lifted Lynus in its claws and vanished into shadows, which seemed to swallow the creature in living darkness.

Our party was thrown into chaos, but I restored order and we followed the tracks of the beast. We came upon cave openings against a hillside and heard chattering within. While the others waited with weapons at the ready, I infiltrated the cave. I found my wounded assistant cocooned in a mass of some sort of fibrous substance while a smaller vektiss was forcing some unpleasant looking substance into his mouth. I created a distraction by hurling a lit flask of oil, prompting much chattering and panic, then grabbed Lynus and fled.

We were not done with these clever creatures, for they followed despite my attempts to cover our tracks. They struck again from the shadows, and it was all we could do to keep them at bay. The manner in which they had followed us puzzled me, and on some inspiration I decided to probe Lynus' leg injury while the others guarded the perimeter. As expected, there was a foreign object lodged deeply in the wound. My less than delicate attempts at surgery served only to cause Lynus pain. The object relented when I bathed the wound in an alchemical mixture designed to ward disease.

I took this hard-shelled sphere and ran into the forest, telling the others to flee. The vektiss followed me, cont-firming their peculiar synergy with this extracted egg. I dropped the thing and made my way back to the group without further incident. I do not envy those who are forced to incubate these eggs, paralyzed and conscious all the while.

Combat

Vektiss fight fiercely when gathered as a pack, using strong mandibles and small claws. If outmatched, they will flee and gather reinforcements. The vektiss are stealthy hunters and will abduct captives to serve as hosts for their offspring. They receive a racial bonus to Swim and Climb.

Implant Egg (Ex): A female can implant an egg in a helpless victim with a successful bite attack. This does 1d3 damage and lodges an egg deep within the body unless the victim makes a Fortitude save (DC 13). These eggs fuse to bone and can only be safely removed by casting remove disease on the victim or with a Heal check (DC 30), failure resulting in an additional 1d4 damage to victim. Eggs will eventually hatch even if removed from a host, although the hatchlings are quite vulnerable and will starve quickly without food.

During incubation the vektiss cocoon, paralyze, and feed the host a regurgitated substance that slows decay after death. Regardless of paralysis the egg hatches in 72 hours, then remains in the host, eating and growing. This causes 1d4 damage and loss of 1 permanent Constitution point every hour. Hatchlings become mature enough to survive on their own (at 1 HD) after approximately 4 days.

Locate Egg (Sp): All members of a pack can sense an implanted egg from one of their females at will, as if under the effect of locate object but with an extended range of 1000 yards.

Poison (Ex): Bite, Fortitude save (DC 13); initial and secondary damage 2d6 temporary Dexterity.

Shadow Shroud (Su): Vektiss have the supernatural ability to create or enhance darkness around them, deepening shadows and facilitating hiding. They cannot become invisible with this power, and it cannot be done in brightly lit areas; however it grants a +8 circumstance bonus to Hide checks.

Treasure

Vektiss lairs may contain valuables left behind from their victims. Undamaged eggs can be sold to alchemists for 100 gp and are useful in mixtures used to enhance divination or to mark an item for easy magical detection. Eggs must be kept very cold to prevent hatching.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: The vektiss are clever insect-like creatures that hunt in packs.

UNCOMMON: Vektiss bites are poisonous and can paralyze a man. They capture people alive and take them to their lairs.

RARE: Vektiss can create shadows and are exceptionally stealthy. They are known to plant eggs in captured victims which can be removed only by means which cure disease.

OBSCURE: A vektiss pack can sense implanted eggs at great distance. Getting rid of the eggs will throw them off one’s trail.
Large Shapechanger
Hit Dice: 6d10+25 (75 hp)
Initiative: +11 (+1 Dex, +6 racial [moon phase], +4 combat pool)
Speed: 40 ft.
AC: 19 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +4
natural [moon phase], +3 combat pool)
Attacks: 3 claws +19 melee, bite +17
melee
Damage: Claw 1d8+10, bite 2d6+5
Face/Reach: 5 ft. by 5 ft./10 ft.
Special Attacks: Baring of chaos
Special Qualities: Scent, regeneration 9, alternate form, lunar warping, controlled warping
Saves: Fort +13, Ref +6, Will +1
Abilities: Str 30, Dex 13, Con 20, Int
11, Wis 6, Cha 10
Skills: Climb +12, Jump +12,

Listen +9, Move Silently +3,
Ride +3, Spot +9, Wilderness
Lore +7

Feats: Alertness, Blind-Fight, Cleave, Great Cleave, Improved Bull Rush,
Multiattack, Power Attack,
Run, Weapon Focus (longsword)

Climate/Terrain: Any
Organization: Solitary
Challenge Rating: 8
Alignment: Chaotic evil
Advancement: By character class

This example uses a 5th-level human fighter as the base creature, with the change occurring while Calder is full, Laris is waning, and Arith is waxing. The combat pool (14 points) has been spread as follows: AC +5, Str +0, base attack bonus +5,
Initiative +4, speed +0.

There are tales all across the Iron Kingdoms of men who become possessed of beasts and transform into hideous monsters that stalk the night. In most places these legends are based on predatory animals that are a common threat. Professor of Cultural Studies Healy Kirklyn, of the Corys University, tells me that these tales serve as an allegory to our own bestiality. But there is one such tale that is no allegory at all. It’s a tale as real as the ground beneath us, my friends. It is the tale of the warpwolf.

I believe that the warpwolf originated somewhere in northern Khedort, the work of a clever Devourer sect rooted there that worshipped an unusual canine aspect of their chaotic defy. They devised a ritual that transforms men into a raging man-wolf that stalks the wilds, spreading death and chaos everywhere. The victim bleeds and seems normal most of the time, as if nothing had happened. But he transforms into a warpwolf when distressed or stirred. There is also something at work regarding the cycle of the moons, though I don’t understand it yet. It seems that the warpwolf has different strengths depending on the phases of the moons at the time of its transformation. It also seems able to alter its body in the midst of combat to suit its immediate needs.

The most frightful aspect of this physical change is that it is addictive. Those who change revel in it, experiencing a physi-ical high like absolutely none other. Alchemical retardants can be made that will prevent the change, but most afflicted eschew these once the addiction sets in.

Exactly how the warpwolf reproduces, I’m not quite certain. I’ve seen documents discussing random particulars of the ritual that the cult originally used, although I believe very strongly that these beasts have devised a way to procreate independently. I’ve heard tales of these creatures striking all across the kingdoms, sometimes in areas where the Devourer holds no sway whatsoever. Of course, the fact that this is an affliction that can be possessed of any man or woman you encounter on the street (and the fact that they themselves could travel to any corner of the realm desired) is a fact that mustn’t be overlooked... unless, that is, one actually wants to sleep soundly at night.
Creating a Warpwolf

Warpwolves were originally created by a sect of the Devourer cult, though the secrets of their creation in this manner have been lost to the ages. Warpwolves are, however, able to procreate on their own. The offspring is carried by the mother (who does not change shape during the pregnancy), though it must be sired by two shapechanged warpwolves. The child seems normal until it reaches adulthood, when it begins undergoing the changes. Virtually all of such children are abandoned, left on a stoop or at a church, often times in a distant kingdom. Only humanoids have ever been known to become warpwolves.

Hit Dice: As the base creature or d8 (as shapechanger), whichever is higher.

Speed: As base creature; see the lunar warping chart for speed increases after changing.

AC: As base creature; see the lunar warping chart for AC increases after changing.

Attacks: As base creature; when changed the warwolf gains bite and claw attacks. For each five points that the warwolf increases its base attack bonus (see controlled warping below), it gains an additional claw attack.

Damage: As base creature; when changed the warwolf gains bite and claw damage per the chart below. So, if a Medium-size creature changed, it would grow to Large, its bite and claw damage increasing to 2d6 and 1d8 respectively.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Size</th>
<th>Bite Damage</th>
<th>Claw Damage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Diminutive</td>
<td>1d3</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tiny</td>
<td>1d4</td>
<td>1d3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Small</td>
<td>1d6</td>
<td>1d6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medium-size</td>
<td>1d8</td>
<td>1d6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Large</td>
<td>2d6</td>
<td>1d8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huge</td>
<td>2d8</td>
<td>2d6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gargantuan</td>
<td>4d6</td>
<td>2d8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colossal</td>
<td>4d8</td>
<td>4d6</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Face/Reach: The creature's size increases by one step when it changes, increasing its face/reach appropriately.

Special Attacks: The creature retains any special attacks or abilities that it has, and it also gains the following:

- Baying of Chaos: Three times per day, the warwolf may release a shrill baying that causes confusion in all creatures within 100 feet. This is as the spell cast by an 8th level sorcerer (save DC 10 + half warwolf’s HD + warwolf’s Cha mod). As this is a sound-based attack, deafened creatures are immune.

Special Qualities

A warwolf retains all of the special qualities of its base creature and gains the shapechanger type. It also gains the scent ability when it transforms, as well as the following:

- Alternate Form: A person affected by the warwolf’s curse will transform into a warwolf at certain uncontrolled times. This change takes a full-round action to perform. Warpwolves may not gain the Control Shape skill, though they make a Will save to resist changing. Changing may not be done at will, though a clever person could get around that (for example, by stabbing themselves). A change usually occurs during any emotionally trying moment, especially one that arouses anger, and whenever the character takes more than 10% of its total hp in damage. The Will save DC to resist is usually 15, though it may be increased at the DM’s discretion. In addition to emotional triggers, the warwolf will change once every 4d6+10 days; this change cannot be resisted (no save) and may occur seemingly at random, though usually at night.

The change will last until the warwolf falls asleep, which is usually 1d2+1 days later. Because of the change's addictive nature, resisting it becomes very difficult as time goes on. The base save DC to resist is increased by 1 for each month of affliction, until eventually resisting the change becomes impossible without alchemical aid.

Upon either changing to or from its warwolf form, the character heals, as if it had rested for a day. If a character is slain in its warwolf form, then it remains so in death. If the character is slain in its humanoid form, then his body changes somewhat to resemble the warwolf.

Do note that a person who has changed into a warwolf loses no bit of their intellect, nor do they have any trouble recalling any of their deeds while changed—they remember it all and...
Warpwolf

actualy warps its body to gain an advantage in one area, while sacrificing an advantage in another area. The creature might grow more armored plates on its body, giving it more AC, or it might grow another limb, giving it another attack, or it might shed some attack measures to gain some speed necessary to flee.

The creature has a base combat pool of 1d6+4 points that may be added to any of the following: AC, Strength, base attack bonus, initiative, or speed. These points are in addition to any bonuses received from lunar warping. Points are exchanged on a one for one basis—one point of AC equals one point of Strength, equals one point of speed, and so on. Only ten points may be spent on an attribute at a time. Additionally, for each of the three moons that is currently full, the warwolf gains another +4 to this combat pool. It takes the creature a move-equivalent action to make any of these adjustments.

Regeneration (Su): Fine and silver do normal damage to a warwolf. They regenerate at a rate of 5 + 4 per full moon per round. Severed limbs grow back upon changing (either to or from warwolf); reattached limbs may be healed instantly by holding them up to the stump.

Saves: As the base creature, when changed the warwolf gains a +4 racial bonus to Fortitude and Reflex saves.

Abilities: As the base creature; when changed the warwolf’s Strength increases per the chart under lunar warping. It also gains a +2 racial bonus to Dexterity and a +6 racial bonus to Con; it receives a −4 racial penalty to Wisdom due to its increased impetuousness.

Skills: The warwolf receives a +4 bonus to Spot, Listen, and Wilderness checks when in its humanoid form, when in its warwolf form these bonuses rise to +8.

Feats: As the base creature; while changed the warwolf gains Improved Bull Rush, Multiattack, Power Attack, and Run, if it does not have them already. Warwolves may never gain the Improved Control Shape feat (as lamnorphes sometimes do).

Climate/Terrain: Same as base creature.
Organization: Always solitary
Challenge Rating: As base creature +3; add +2 for each moon that is full as the time of combat.
Alignment: Per base creature; always becomes chaotic evil when in warpswolf form.
Advancement: By character class

Combat

Warpswolves favor their bite and claw attacks when in combat. They immediately shed whatever clothing, armor, and items they may have been wearing upon transforming. They retain their intelligence completely, though they are totally lost to their bestial hunger.

Baying of Chaos (Su): The DC to resist this warpswolf’s baying is 10.

Treasure

Warpswolves hold no particular type of treasure, though those who turn into them might have anything imaginable.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: A rare malady exists that makes men become possessed of beast, turning into a horrid wolf creature that stalks the wilds, hunting all that lives.
UNCOMMON: These creatures are called warpswolves, and their bodies are constantly in a state of flux.
RARE: A warpswolf’s changes are a mix of control and entropy. They seem subject to the whims of the moons, though during a confrontation they can change their bodies to meet their needs.
OBSCURE: An alchemical tonic does exist that will keep a man from undergoing the change into beast, though it is difficult to come by, and it weakens the body even if it does prevent change.

Hooks

A crooked and vengeful alchemist out of Fellig has rediscovered the ancient Devourer cult’s rites to transform a man into a warpswolf. The madman has performed the rite on none other than his own family (four adults and three children). So far nothing has happened, but soon they are going to undergo their first change, warping into hungry wolf-beasts, ready to tear the city apart.

Quicksilver Tonic: This is a silvery liquid that was alchemically brewed by the Devourer cult that originally spawned these horrid creatures. It was used to help victims resist the change into their abominable other self. It does not guarantee safety, but it considerably ups the odds of maintaining control. Drinking the proper dosage (about 30 oz.) grants the recipient a +12 circumstance bonus to their Will save to resist the change. Furthermore, it prevents the addiction from taking hold (and thus upping the save DC) so long as it is taken on a regular basis.

In order for it to function, it must be taken just before a change is about to take place.

It is, however, poisonous (save DC 13), doing initial damage of 1d8 Strength and secondary damage of 1d6 Strength and 1d6 Intelligence. Should the imbiber fail their shapechanging save and become a warpswolf, the poison is shrugged off.

Only a few alchemical shops across the lands possess the formula for this concoction, and they don’t sell it cheaply.

This form of luna’s sensitivity appears to be unique to the warpswolf.

Thank goodness.
Among the peoples of the Iron Kingdoms, there are few that arouse as much apprehension as the mysterious druids. When one of these robed figures strides into town, the streets clear and the place becomes so quiet one might think there were a pack of gnolls stalking about. Their connections to the chaotic Devourer Wurm make them targets of high suspicion, and their rejection of worldly ways doesn’t help it at all either. While I don’t believe druids (at least not all druids) to be the baby-sackers they’re accused to be, I do know that they’re not to be trifled with.

One of the easiest ways to tell you are poking about in a druid’s territory is if you come across a woldwarden... and my advice to you is to take your business elsewhere. Not that I need warn you, the sight of one of these behemoths alone ought to be enough to scare most off. They are humanoid constructs, in some ways like a steamjack, crafted of wood and stone, standing 15 to 20 feet tall, and adorned with runes that glow furiously when it attacks. Druids use these creations to guard and patrol important areas, which I’ve found are marked off by stones set with similarly glowing runes carved in them.

During one of my more bizarre adventures I became the temporary guest of a druid in an uninhabited area of northern Cygnar. During my stay, her territory was invaded by a band of gobblins, and I got to witness the spectacle as she sent her two guardians into action. Despite their lumbering bulk, these things whisked through the brush as if it weren’t even there. When engaging the gobblins they would command the vegetation about them to turn upon them and hold them while they pounded with (literally) explosive blows that pulverized the poor buggers. Despite their being the trespassers, I felt a bit sorry for the gobblins being trounced by such a powerful opponent. Those few that survived, at least, will steer clear of the protected wood in the future I’m sure.

Combat

Woldwardens follow orders in combat—either those directly given during the melee or free-standing orders given previously. They use their spell-like abilities primarily to slow and pin down opponents while they move in to hit them with charged slams.

Druid’s Wrath (Su): Once every other round, as a free action, the woldwarden may tap into nature’s power and unleash its creator’s wrath. This adds 1d10+2 additional damage to a normal attack. When this is done, all of the guardian’s runes glow... with an intensifying yellow light that is discharged when the blow is struck. If the attack misses, then the charge remains until a successful blow is struck.

Magic Immunity (Su): Woldwardens are immune to all spells of the Animal, Chaos, Destruction, Plant, and Strength domains. They are also immune to all spells that directly affect plants, trees, or wood, as well as all shape-changing spells.

Meld with Nature (Ex): A woldwarden can pass through non-enchanted vegetation completely unhindered and unharmed. They also leave no trail in such an environment and may not be tracked by normal means.

Spell-like Abilities: 3/day—call lightning, entangle, flame strike, plant growth, gust, smite, spine growth; 1/day—wall of thorns. These are as the spells cast by a 12th-level druid (save DC 10 + spell level).

Treasure

Woldwardens keep no treasure of their own, however they are frequently the guards of various valuables. In such cases, the treasure garnered would be anything imaginable that would be of value to a druid.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: Powerful druids sometimes construct incredible automatons out of wood and stone to guard important areas.

UNCOMMON: These sentinels have the ability to unleash their creator's fury in explosive blows.

RARE: Woldwardens' only true weakness is their lack of intelligence, and it is often better to circumvent them than to engage them directly.

OBSCURE: Guardian creation is strictly controlled by a mysterious organization of druids, sometimes called the Circle, and it is rumored that high members of the organization can wrest control of a guardian from its creator.

Hooks

A powerful merchant out of Okk had a son kidnapped by a powerful druid who claims an injustice done against her (theft). A pair of woldwardens guards the son, and the father is desperate for someone to either negotiate with the druid for his son's return or to defeat the sentinels guarding him. The father claims neither he nor his son have stolen anything. In truth, the son is covering for his younger brother, the real thief.
Wyldegeist

Medium-size Aberration

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ability</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hit Dice</td>
<td>4d8 + 12 (30 hp)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative</td>
<td>+5 (+1 Dex, +4 Improved Initiative)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Speed</td>
<td>Fly 20 ft. (perfect)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AC</td>
<td>15 (+1 Dex, +4 deflection)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Attacks</td>
<td>Acidic mist</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Qualities</td>
<td>Spiritbind, gaseous form, damage reduction 20/+, immune to mental influence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saves</td>
<td>Fort +4, Ref +2, Will +7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abilities</td>
<td>Str 10, Dex 13, Con 17, Int 13, Wis 17, Cha 18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skills</td>
<td>Hide +8, Listen +10, Move Silently +8, Search +4, Sense Motive +4, Spot +8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feats</td>
<td>Improved Initiative</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Climate/Terrain</td>
<td>Any forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Organization</td>
<td>Colony (5–20)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Challenge Rating</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alignment</td>
<td>Always neutral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advancement</td>
<td>5–10 HD (Medium-size)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

I discovered the wyldegeist during one of my travels through untamed Khador at a roadside inn where I made the acquaintance of a peculiar merchant. I recall the man distinctly. His long scraggly hair, white as ash, and his thin, fickle body jerking in a state of palsy while he struggled with trembling fingers to stack his coins on the tabletop. He vowed I'd find his tale an intriguing one:

"At first I saw what appeared to be a green flame floating toward me from the shaded boughs of a twisted tree. As it came nearer I could make out a figure, like that of a man. He was adorned in a tattered breastplate with a ragged black cloak flapping behind him. Then I saw the face, that terrible, terrible face! He wore no helm and his fiery eyes bored into me from his sallow, nearly-transparent features... I had thought it mere superstition—even laughed at the Orlaik who had warned me—but this was a hollow devil indeed! Armed with both sword and pistol, this infernal creature reduced my wagon to kindling, my wagoneer to a headless corpse, my bodyguard to a limbless, hole-punched carcass, and me—well, just you look at me!"

I was intrigued. After more research on these “hollow devils,” I uncovered the following entry in an old tome sent from one of my Khadoran contacts:

"Once upon a time, there was a body of soldiers stationed the Oriental coast who held the border fort along the northwestern wood called the Blackroot for some centuries after the creation of the Orzhov Empire. After many years of constant vigilance however, the Seraph fell into disarray. Their leaders became materialistic and greedy. They began to seize the belongings of the outlying provinces, taking riches and collecting their hunt in the underground caverns beneath the long-standing fortresses.

In time, these leaders turned on each other, and the forest guardians went to war against themselves. The once-peaceful wood became war with blood as erstwhile allies now slew one another for possession of the hoards beneath the forest.

Finally the forest itself would no longer have it. From deep within the Blackroot came a haunting green fog that flowed along the ground—emerald-colored tendrils of mist wrapped around the trees and vegetation and flowed over the fallen on the foul fields of battle. As the mist touched the unsacred battlefield, the soldiers rose up and clashed once more against those that had slain them.

It has never been discovered, this monstrous and terrible vapor’s origin, but it persisted the dead men and dissolved their bodies so that only their arms and armor stayed intact. Their one-time visage became little more than a pale, distorted, ghastly green mockery of what it had once been in life. These hollow devils overran the soldiers, yet living that day, then rushed into the gloom. It is said they passed the treasures of the forest still, and those who are foolish enough to venture into the woods with pride in their hearts will know the wrath of these wretched green devils."
Combat

Wyldgeists do not make physical attacks in their base form and ignore physical attacks made on them in this form, unless the attacks bypass their damage reduction. Their first action will always be to find a dead creature and bond with its dead spirit. If the wyldgeist already possesses such a form, it immediately attacks to drive out the defilers of the forest it protects.

Spiritbind (Su): Wyldgeists have the ability to form a bond with the dead spirit of a dead creature. As a full-round action, the wyldgeist dissolves the dead creature’s flesh and replaces it with its own body and will. Using the dead creature’s natural weaponry (or other weapons, if any), it attacks those who have intruded upon their domain. Non-supernatural, extraordinary, spells, or spell-like abilities are absorbed in the transference. The wyldgeist uses the speed rating and mode of movement of the bonded creature, but retains its own ability scores and saves. It can maintain this form indefinitely if not defeated in combat.

A wyldgeist in this form uses the damage rating of the creature’s weaponry (the longsword of a fallen warrior, for example), but uses its own attack bonus (+3 for melee and +4 for ranged). It always functions as proficient with the attack form it uses, a result of the bond formed with the spirit of the fallen. It also adds any bonuses from any armor the host may have been wearing (i.e., add +5 to AC if it acquired a breastplate).

A wyldgeist defeated (reduced to 0 or less HP) in this form is not slain. It simply sinks into the earth to heal itself to the point where it can once again bond with a spirit. It heals at a rate of 1 HP/day. There is no known way to permanently destroy a wyldgeist.

Acidic Mist (Su): Although wyldgeists in their base form do not attack the living, their body, composed of an acidic mist with which they dissolve the dead, does harm any living flesh after a prolonged contact. A being touched by a wyldgeist for one full round suffers 2d4 points of acid damage. Affected creatures that make a Fortitude save (DC 12) take half damage.

Gaseous Form (Ex): Since its base form is composed of mist, a wyldgeist that is not bonded to a spirit shares some of the characteristics of a creature in gaseous form, passing through small holes and narrow openings and having damage reduction 20/+1.

Immune to Mental Influence (Ex): Wyldgeists are unaffected by mind-affecting effects (charms, compulsions, phantasms, and morale effects).

Treasure

Once it is defeated, any gear or treasure that the wyldgeist had taken through spiritbinding will be left behind for the taking.

Legends & Lore

COMMON: None.

UNCOMMON: Wyldgeists are warrior ghosts attracted to feelings of greed and envy.

RARE: When the wyldgeists are not active, their physical trappings are secreted away inside of earthen mounds in the deepest reaches of the forest.

OBSCURE A little known tale claims that the wyldgeists are not ghosts at all but rather servants of the Green Man, the legendary guardian of the forests of northern Ithiron. They are a manifestation of the Green Man’s power, taking form in a fallen being’s psyche, although seemingly the spirit of the deceased has since departed.
Legends & Lore

Legends and lore represent various myths and tales of the Iron Kingdoms. Typically these tales give insight into a creature’s history, habits, and powers. At the core, these myths and legends should be considered very carefully; they may save an adventurer from a watery grave at the hands of a boatman or an eternity of infernal servitude. An undeserved legend has been the death of many an adventurer!

The sort of information you can gain from dusty tomes, ancient scrolls, and the legends of veteran adventurers will often vary in quality. Legends and lore are classified under one of four types. You'll find Common, Uncommon, Rare, and Obscure lore, depending on how well you search out the secrets you seek.

Common lore is easy to find. This can be the name of a creature, what it is supposed to look like, or even speculations on its origin. Typically this comes in the form of a tall tale told by an old salt or a poorly written passage in an ancient bestiary. Common lore is usually just enough to give you a rough idea of what you may potentially face. A rare creature might not have any Common lore.

Uncommon bits of lore tend to be more specific and helpful. Examples are vague ideas of what sorts of powers a creature may possess, weaknesses it might have, or even the vagaries of where it may be. Usually this lore comes in some concrete form. Old maps from the attics of dead adventurers or tomes and books written by half-mad scribes are good sources for this sort of lore. An extremely rare creature might not have any Common or Uncommon lore.

The realm of Rare lore is the province of the damned. This information almost always comes from firsthand encounters, survivors of attacks, or an observant made by hidden spies. Infernal tomes of summoning, a necromancer's notebook, a rogue apprentice's betrayal—these can all grant you Rare lore. This sort of information is specific and often directly useful. The specific powers of a creature or how to counter a special attack it makes are types of Rare lore that might save your bacon.

Obscure lore comes in many forms, such as fevered scrawling found on asylum walls, doodled up secrets from ancient writings, and the perturbing observations of otherworldly đinrims. Obscure lore isn't always directly helpful to you—the problem with myths and ancient texts is that they often need to be interpreted. Still, Obscure lore can reveal origins of a creature or its fatal flaws if the researcher is diligent.

What You Already Know

If you have Wilderness Lore or a relevant Knowledge skill, you may be aware of some facts about a creature already. The DM makes a secret Knowledge (Arcana) test for the wizard. The result is 14, meaning that some Common knowledge is known (see chart below for DCs). The DM tells the wizard that this is a sure sign that a "frilled gobbinsnatcher" is about.

Later in their quest, the party encounters a dracodile in a marshy area near the foothills of the Wyrmwall Mountains. Upon spying the creature, the DM allows the ranger (whose favored enemy type is magical beasts) to make a Wilderness Lore check. The result is 18, Uncommon knowledge. The DM informs the ranger that the dracodile lies in swamps and marshes and that mothers are extremely protective of their eggs.

It's up to the DM to decide what skill is relevant and assign fair DCs. Perhaps a creature is extremely rare or new to the area—in such a case even a skilled character may have no chance of knowing anything about it. You won't get to roll for lore on every creature you see, but characters that specialize in Creature Lore will still be a font of useful information.

Researching the Unknown

Knowledge skills and Wilderness Lore are handy for instant recall of common and uncommon facts, but how are the more obscure legends uncovered? Through research, which can be a very time-consuming prospect. Gather Information can be used for research, as can the new skill Creature Lore. DMs may use other skills that can be employed for research as well.

If you wish to research a creature, tomes and other relics may provide an additional bonus. The tome used must be pertinent to the creature type—a tome on undead or research shaft wights, for example. You need to study one week for each +1 of the
New Feats

Unearthed Arcana [General]

You have managed to discover the secrets of myth and legend and have distilled them into concrete knowledge.

Prerequisites: No less than 4 ranks in Creature Lore.

Benefit: For every 4 ranks in the Creature Lore skill you may gain Common, Uncommon, and Rare legends and lore on two specific creatures from a specific creature category (i.e. giants, dryads, undead, etc.). As your skill increases so does your knowledge; every time your Creature Lore skill increases by 4 ranks you gain insight on two more creatures of that type.

This feat is based on specific creature type. For instance Unearthed Arcana (undead) gives you knowledge of creatures of the undead type. If you want to learn about aberrations you would need to take the feat a second time, as Unearthed Arcana (aberrations). There are two exceptions to this: humanoid and monstrous humanoid are "bundled" together, as are beasts and magical beasts.

Special: You may not learn the legends and lore of a creature with a CR that exceeds double your base Creature Lore skill.

Myth Delver [General]

You gain greater insight into the tales and chronicles left over from the past.

Prerequisites: Bard only.

Benefit: You gain a +4 circumstance bonus on skill checks to research lore or a +4 circumstance bonus to your bardic knowledge check (whichever is greater).

Special: This feat may only be taken once.

Sagas and Stories [General]

You've done a lot of reading and study on the myths about a specific creature type.

Benefit: You automatically gain Common knowledge on any creature of that type when it is described to you. When researching a monster of that specific type your legends and lore check takes half of the regular time.

Special: This feat may only be taken once for every creature type. For instance, you may only take Sagas and Stories (undead) once. If you select Sagas and Stories again you must take it for a different creature type.

Tall Tales [General]

You've listened to a lot of tall tales and have seen a few weird things.

Benefit: You can make an Intelligence check (DC 10) to gain Common knowledge about any creature you encounter or hear mention of. If you exceed the DC by 10 or more, you recall something you've witnessed or heard that gives you Uncommon knowledge about that specific creature as well.
Tomes of Lore

Olaus hauls the thick and dusty book from the top shelf. His frail arms tremble as he lowers himself down the ladder. The book sits heavily in his arms. Bound in iron and brass, it is large enough to use as a shield. He positions it over the lectern just as his strength gives out, and the brass and crimson book lends a resounding thud.

His tired eyes peer from beneath thick lenses. Wearily he brings a lantern closer so he may read. His frame is bent with the effort of carrying the tome; he sits heavily in his chair. Slowly, and carefully, he opens the cover of the book. Words in ancient Cygnarian stare back at him. The words scrawled in blood and ink are a warning.

"Read these secrets with fear in mind, for your soul eternal may soon be mine."

A chill runs down Olaus's back. The passage is a warning scrawled by the Agryth Vashok himself, a thousand years dead, destroyed by the Orogth.

Even though Olaus's fear commands him to close the cover to the massive book, he doesn't. Licking his lips in anticipation he flips the first page. Out loud he thinks to himself, "For the knowledge in this book, eternal damnation is worth the risk."

Tomes, whether they come from a musty library or long-lost ruins, are sought out for the secrets they hold. These libraries of lore and legend are knowledge, damnation, and to some, salvation. Tomes of creature lore will be considered here, though the rules set down will apply equally well to any other field.

Tomes are always written with specific subject matter in mind. The subject may be broad (trolls of the Iron Kingdoms) or specific (goblins of Widower's Wood). The DM must keep the subject of the tome in mind as research tasks are adjudicated.

Ancient tomes do not tend to be very portable. Typically a tome is far too cumbersome to carry. Pages and pages of text, diagrams, and elaborate bindings and covers keep the size of a tome prohibitive. Unlike a wizard's spellbook, these huge books can't be lugged around in a backpack.

A tome holds secrets, true, but often these secrets are simply too complex to decipher without the proper skill. In order to use a tome fully, one needs to have the Creature Lore skill (or another appropriate to its contents). With this skill, one can delve into a tome and find the secrets inside as long as they spend the proper time absorbing the contents of the book. To use the full bonus of a tome, one must spend at least that many weeks studying it. This means if a tome gives a +4 bonus for reading instead, one must spend 4 weeks studying its arcane secrets.

If one doesn't have the time to glean all of the information a tome holds, then they can receive a partial bonus. A point of the bonus is gained for every week spent reading the moldy book, for a minimum of 1 week. Thus if one has access to a tome with a +4 bonus and may only read it for two weeks, they can gain a +2 to their legends and lore check (see "Legends and Lore" for more info) using that book.

Sometimes tomes contain detailed snippets of information that prove immediately useful. This can be in the form of Common, Uncommon, or Rare lore. It takes about 1 day of reading to absorb these secrets per creature detailed. Thus, if a book held detailed lore on three specific creatures, it would take three days to absorb all of the information.

Lastly, more than one tome can be used for research, but the maximum benefit that can be realized from any combination of references is +5.

Monstrous Manuals

The Manual of Ked Dram Duran
+3 Tome of Aberration Lore

Ked Dram was a mage who had a fascination with the twisted mutations found in the sewers and passages beneath Corvis. If it bored, levitated, squashed, or dragged itself along chances were Ked had classified it in this book. It's said that he met his end while trying to study the mutated leech colonies that dwell in the fetid canals of the Undercity of Corvis. Amidst pools of glowing sewage and half-dissolved rat bones he was finally found. His scabby, blood-drenched corpse was covered with toothy mawed monstrosities.

The Manual of Ked is a large tome covered in a sickly purple and green hide cover. It smells faintly of some sort of chemical, and the cover itself is slick to the touch. If left in the dark, it glows slightly, giving off enough sickly green light to read the pages.

Legends & Lore

Ked Dram Duran's manual contains Common lore on any aberration that can be found in or near the city of Corvis. While what creatures this entails is up to the DM to decide, the book does contain information on the anatomy and abilities of many other aberrations as well. The gruesome diagrams and fanatically scribbled writings bestow a +3 bonus on legends and lore checks that research aberrations.

Tocen's Guide to Revenants and Reanimates
+3 Tome of Undead Lore

This book can be found on the bookshelves of many an adventurer. Although it has been reprinted many times, the information is generally useful, if not completely accurate. This common tome offers the occasional insight into the behavior of the risen dead. Traditional wards and swamp folk charms against these creatures are detailed to some degree.

Legends & Lore
The Guide to Revenants and Reanimated details methods and means to deal with all sorts of undead. This book grants a +1 bonus to all legends and lore checks to research undead.

Chronicles of the Troll Hunter
+2 Tome of Troll Lore

The chronicler Karl Gauss first began retelling the tales of Sargov Cromme, a man tougher than steel and deadlier than a drazoral swarm. Sargov is a hero of the people of Khador. A statue of him can be found in the city of Korik, his left foot poised on the massive head of Groane the Grim. Groane was a legendary dire troll that Cromme killed in a savage struggle that lasted a month—or so the tales say. A troll hunter and self-styled adventurer, Sargov generated endless tall tales for Gauss to retell. Most of these tales have become more preposterous over the years. However, in this collection of myths there are some truths about the trolls of the Iron Kingdoms.

Legends & Lore
This lavishly illustrated book contains tales of all sorts of fantastic whimsy. Although the truth of the matter is probably far more bloody and grim, this book paints a picture of heroic struggles against vicious monsters. This book has no special quirks, but the lore it contains on trolls is oddly accurate. This book bestows a +2 bonus on legends and lore checks regarding trolls, except for trollkin, which Cromme did not cross paths with much.

Tome Creation

Inverness holds the pen in his right hand. The tip poised over paper. As he writes, he takes occasional glances back at the lump creature on the dissection table. Sharp, jagged spines cover its limbs and back, coiling its body oddly on the table.
If it stood it would be as tall as Inverness himself, and perhaps two to three times as strong. Luckily, it lies quite dead, festering sword slashes and arrow wounds riddling its corpse. The killing blow, a red feathered arrow, still juts from the creature's heart.

Although Inverness has extensive knowledge of monstrous humansoids, this creature is unique and warrants further study.
Inverness details its anatomy, and sketches out diagrams of its more unusual qualities. As he writes, he hopes that the adventurers who hold him the corpse will be willing to tell him about their encounter with it. Perhaps the steed group of mercenaries might be willing to bring him more specimens.

This will prove to be an interesting addition to his book.
Most interesting.

The libraries of the Iron Kingdoms are vast and full of knowledge vital to the cautious adventurer. It is impossible to detail all of the books on these shelves, but here are provided some guidelines on creating tomes for your campaign. Keep in mind that these texts and writings aren’t common enough to be readily available. Tomes of lore should be treated with the same accord as magic items. These books unleash all sorts of information, and that can be a nightmare for a DM trying to keep tabs on a group of rashbountiour monster-hunting players.

Creating a tome requires a bit of thought. To add depth and background to each tome you create you should consider the points below. These will help you breathe life into the books and possibly spawn adventures for the players to take on.

What is the tome’s title? The title is often an indicator of what sorts of subject matter it covers. Some tomes will have highly technical sounding titles, such as Theories and Analytical Diagrams of the Black River Dracoloth, while others will have very plain titles, such as Legends of the Gutsmen. Foreign tongues are great to employ in titles, such as the Libra ex Gymnubas.

Who wrote the tome? Was it scribed by a wizened sorcerer or written by a swordmaster of Khador? This will often factor in to how the tome is written, what it looks like, and where it might be found. A short background on the writer, even a sentence that describes who they were will prove helpful.

Why was it written? Perhaps it was commissioned by the militarian or a wealthy enthusiast; it also might have been written for the masses, being found in bookshops and libraries. Even secret societies like the Inquisition may require books to aid them with pernicious plots, and this reason can often factor in to adventures that may involve the information in a tome.

When was it written? Is the ink still fresh on the pages, or do the pages crumble at the touch? Often books like these can be as ancient as all time or newly written by men that are still alive. The age of a tome can determine the value of the information inside.
It can also determine how careful anyone handling it has to be.

Monetary Tome Value

Tomes carry a base value that is formulated according to its bonus. Use the following chart as a guideline.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bonus</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>+1</td>
<td>1000 gp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>+2</td>
<td>2500 gp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>+3</td>
<td>6000 gp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>+4</td>
<td>10,000 gp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>+5</td>
<td>15,000 gp</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This is only a base guideline and shouldn’t be followed in absolute. For example, 4-5 tomes are probably going to cost a lot more than just money to acquire. Tomes might also be scaled up if they contain particularly valuable or rare information.
Quickplates are templates that are designed along the standard guidelines, but streamlined with quick use in mind. They are great for fleshing out creatures meant for lesser encounters and making secondary opponents more dynamic and challenging.

Saving Throws: Do note that in some cases creatures will receive an increase to a saving throw through both a stat increase and a saving throw bonus—the two stack. So, if an alpha hunter creature received a +1 to its Reflex save due to its Dex increasing by 2, this +1 would stack with the +2 it receives to all saving throws.

Alpha Hunter

An alpha hunter is typically the dominant male in a pride, pack, or pod of hunting creatures. Although it is typically applied to animals and beasts, it can be in some cases be applied to more primitive humanoids or similar creatures as well. The alpha hunter is almost always male, and he is the biggest, strongest, and oftentimes most cunning hunter of the pack.

Hit Dice: Double the creature’s Constitution modifier to hit.

Initiative: Add +4 (Improved Initiative).

Speed: Add 10 feet to the creature’s speed.

AC: If it has a natural AC bonus, that bonus is increased by one half.

Saves: Add +2 to all saves.

Abilities: Add +5 to Strength, +2 to Dexterity, and +2 to Charisma.

Skills: The creature gains bonus skill points enough to give it maximum possible ranks in Intimidate (these bonus points may only be applied to Intimidate).

Feats: Improved Initiative, Leadership*.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1/2.

Restrictions: May only be applied to creatures that hunt in groups of some form and which have some form of communication, even if animalistic (howls, grunts, etc.).

Combat:

An alpha hunter’s most formidable strength is in its ability to lead others. One seldom encounters an alpha hunter alone, and in most cases they will command their underlings to attack first. In individual combat, an alpha hunter uses the same strategies as its base creature, only with greater speed and strength. Do note that alpha hunters capable of using weapons and armor will have the best available.

Leadership: The alpha hunter uses his HD as its level for determining its Leadership score. Additionally, it may apply its Intimidate ranks + Strength modifier as a racial modifier when leading creatures of its own base type. Penalties for things such as面对面的时间 do not apply to an alpha hunter’s score. Do note that in many cases the cohort/follower relationship will be extremely rudimentary (cause they’re animals, see?).

Bloodthirsty

A carnivorous creature is one whose love of killing has grown so strong that the beast becomes overwhelmed with desire and is imbued with an uncanny strength. This bloodthirsty nature dulls the mind of the creature, although this only makes them more singular in their purpose.

Initiative: Add a +2 morale bonus to initiative.

AC: Creature suffers -2 to AC.

Attack: Add a +2 morale bonus to melee strikes.

Damage: Creature gains one and a half times Strength modifier to damage; if the Strength modifier is already doubled as such, then it is now doubled.

Special Attacks: Blood rage.

Special Qualities: Gains the scent extraordinary ability; all ranges are doubled when tracking a bleeding creature.

Saves: Creature gains +2 Fortitude and +2 Will.

Abilities: Gains +2 Strength and Constitution and 4 Wisdom.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.

Alignment: The first alignment component shifts to chaotic, if it isn’t already.

Restrictions: May only be applied to carnivorous creatures; on occasion it may apply to omnivores, but only those that rely heavily on meat.

Combat:

A bloodthirsty creature will always use less tactics in combat than a creature of its base type. In most cases they attack very single-mindedly, focusing on a single creature until it is dead and moving on to another. They heavily favor melee.
attacks, and they have a penchant for sending blood spraying everywhere, be it their prey’s or their own. They are smart enough to attack weaker prey, and if they have not blood raged yet, then they may even retreat from melee. Once they blood rage, they become bundles of terror that kill everything in sight except other members of their own pack.

Blood Rage (Ex): Whenever a bloodthirsty creature draws blood in combat, there is a 5% chance per hp of damage dealt that it will go into a blood rage. A creature in a blood rage makes one extra primary attack per round at no penalty; however it suffers an additional -4 to its AC. It will keep on fighting until -10 hp at no additional penalty, although it is not allowed any rolls for stabilization while in this state. It is immune to all fear effects in this state and will fight to the death. A blood rage only ends when everything in the immediate vicinity is dead; a bloody, carnivorous feast usually follows.

Crafty

A crafty creature is one that is slyer and slicker than the rest. They have a preternatural cunning that sets them apart from the rest of their breed. Sometimes, this gives the creature advantages that place it into a position of prominence in its culture, although in some cases the creature’s increased awareness might make it an outcast.

AC: Creature gains a +2 Insight bonus to AC.
Attacks: The creature may apply its Wisdom modifier to attacks instead of Strength or Dexterity if it is higher.
Saves: Add +2 to Will.
Abilities: Add +2 to Intelligence and Wisdom.
Skills: The creature gains 2 x Intelligence score in bonus skill points.
Feats: The creature may choose 3 bonus feats.
Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.
Restrictions: May not be applied to creatures that lack an Intelligence score.

Holy

While the path of evil is oftentimes the road most easily traveled, the path towards light can be just as powerful—or even more so. A holy creature is one that has been in the presence of a divine aura for so long that it has become imbued with holy might. Most of such creatures are ones that have been guarding a holy site for an extended period of time, although those residing in such areas for long periods might be affected as well.

AC: Creature gains a +2 sacred bonus to AC.
Damage: All melee attacks do an additional 1d4 sacred damage to evil-aligned creatures.
Special Attacks: Healing.
Special Qualities: Damage reduction 10/+1, detect evil, enlightened body, unshakable.
Saves: Add +2 to Will saves.
Abilities: Add +2 to Wisdom and Charisma.
Challenge Rating: Increase by 2.
Restrictions: Can only be applied to good-aligned creatures. Also note that it is far more rare than the maligned quickplate.

Deep Dweller

A deep dwelling creature is one that has adjusted to a subterranean environment. Oftentimes they are lone creatures that have wandered into such an environment and have adapted, although sometimes entire groups of creatures might have adapted in such a manner.

Speed: Creature gains climb movement equal to half its base movement.
Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., lean, scent.
Saves: Add +2 to Fortitude saves.
Abilities: Add +2 to Constitution and Dexterity.
Skills: Creature gains a +4 racial bonus to Hide, Listen, and Move Silently checks.
Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.
Restrictions: This quickplate is typically not applied to Large or larger creatures, and obviously it does not apply to already subterranean creatures.

Lean (Ex): Food and water are harder to come by in a subterranean environment, and deep dwelling creatures adapt to having less of them. They require half as much sustenance as their base type.
Quickplates

Enlightened Body (Su): A holy creature is immune to diseases, including magical diseases, and has a poison resistance (see pp. 188) of 15. While they remain in the area that imbued them with their aura, their aging slows to a crawl (about one fourth normal).

Healing (Su): A holy creature can heal other creatures by its mere touch. It may heal a number of hit points per day equal to its HD times its Charisma modifier. These points may be spread out among multiple healings. The creature may heal itself. It may use this ability as a touch attack to deal damage to undead; the amount of damage done is chosen after the creature has been successfully touched.

Unshakable (Ex): A holy creature is not affected by fear in any capacity, magical or otherwise.

Maligned

The powers of evil oftentimes manipulate powerful energies, and if left unchecked those energies can spread forth and enshroud their influence upon the world. A maligned creature is one that has been tainted by dark energies of some sort.

AC: Creature gains a +2 profane bonus to AC.

Damage: All melee attacks done by hand (not weapon) do an additional 1d4 profane damage to good and neutral-aligned creatures.

Special Qualities: Darkvision 60 ft., detect good, light sensitivity, longevity.

Saves: Add +2 to Will saves.

Alignment: Second component shifts to evil.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.

Restrictions: May not be applied to creatures lacking an Intelligence score or extremely large creatures (DM’s discretion).

Combat

Maligned creatures will use the abilities of their base type, except now they will prefer fighting in darkness and using stealth and deception as much as possible.

Detect Good (Sp): The creature now inherently detects good-aligned creatures, as per the spell detect good.

Light Sensitive (Ex): The creature suffers -2 to initiative and attacks made in light stronger than torchlight.

Longevity (Su): The continued existence of such a creature is seldom a short one. So long as the maligned creature remains in the area that imbued it with its tainted aura, its aging slows to a crawl (about one fourth normal).

Stealthy

As its name would suggest, a stealthy creature is one that has mastered the arts of stealth to a far greater extent than is typical for its race. These creatures can develop in any number of ways. Quite often they are loners who were forced to fend for themselves and who found ulterior means to strength to survive, although sometimes an entire group of a particular creature might have adapted these means together.

Initiative: Gains a +2 insight bonus to initiative.

Speed: Add 10 feet to the creature’s base speed.

AC: The creature may add its Wisdom bonus, if any, to its AC.

Special Attacks: Sneak attack.

Saves: Add +2 to Reflex saves.

Abilities: Add +2 to Dexterity and Wisdom.

Skills: The creature gains a +4 racial bonus to Balance, Hide, Move Silently, Listen, and Spot checks.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.

Restrictions: May not be applied to creatures lacking an Intelligence score or extremely large creatures (DM’s discretion).

Combat

Obviously, stealthy creatures favor stealth in combat. They will usually make good use of their natural abilities, as well as their natural habitat. They favor their sneak attack, especially if attacking in numbers, and they are seldom afraid to retreat from a losing battle.

Sneak Attack (Ex): A stealthy creature may make a sneak attack to deal extra damage versus an opponent. This applies whenever the stealthy creature flanks an opponent or whenever the creature’s target would normally be denied its Dexterity bonus to AC. Creatures immune to critical hits are immune to this ability. A successful sneak attack deals +1d4 damage per 2 HD of the stealthy creature.

Tough

A tough creature is able to take a lot more physical punishment than most of its kind.

Hit Dice: A tough creature gains one and a half times its Constitution bonus to hit.

AC: Gains an additional natural bonus to AC equal to its Constitution modifier.
Quickplate

Special Qualities: Improved healing.

Saves: Add +2 to Fortitude saves.

Abilities: Add +4 to Constitution.

Feats: Endurance.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.

Restrictions: Creatures lacking a Constitution score may not be of this type.

Combat

A tough creature will fight as per its base type, but will be harder to take down than most.

Improved Healing (Ex): The creature now heals at double the base creature type's rate. If it has any healing special abilities, such as fast healing or regeneration, the rates those are doubled as well.

Urban

An urban creature is one that is normally found in the wilderness, but has adapted to life in the city. These are usually small creatures that have made a nest in some rundown area and have found a means of sustaining themselves, whether by scavenging through refuse or assaulting citizens. They are very stealthy and secretive and can dwell in a hidden den for years without being found. Frequently, they become the subject of greatly exaggerated urban legends.

Type: The creature gains the urban subtype.

Speed: They gain a climb speed equal to their normal speed.

Special Qualities: City stealth, hidden den.

Saves: Add +2 to Fortitude and Will saves.

Abilities: Add +2 to Dexterity and Constitution.

Skills: Urban creatures gain a +4 racial bonus to Balance, Climb, Hide, Jump, Move Silently, and Search checks.

Feats: Dodge, Mobility.

Organization: Changes to solitary in most cases.

Challenge Rating: Increase by 1.

Restrictions: Creatures larger than Small size are not normally allowed to use this quickplate (DM's discretion).

Combat

Urban creatures vary widely in combat, and their methods are generally consistent with the base creature type. Their movement abilities are incredible, and they can either stalk prey or flee from enemies through urban terrain with grace that few can keep up with. Secrecy is part of their nature, and as such they usually only engage in combat when it favors them.

City Stealth (Su): An urban creature leaves no tracks when moving about in an urban environment and may not be tracked by conventional means.

Hidden Den (Ex): All urban creatures maintain a den of some type. This is always in a hidden location. Anyone attempting to locate it suffers a -4 circumstance penalty to all related skill checks (such as Spot and Search).

I must admit a particular fascination with creatures that have learned to make their homes in our cities. I look forward to completing a scholarly treatise on the urban environment one day, but first I have much work to finish in the wilds... and I haven't even touched on what fascinating things Wyrm has to offer.

Of course, sometimes I think Lirius would be happy never to leave the university again, but I can't stay put for too long without getting itchy feet.
Introducing Viktor Pendrake

Legends tell of a hero of men—a man so possessed with his thirst for knowledge that he would barehanded scale a hundred feet of cliff on the Broken Coast simply to recover a perfect feather from the nest of a massive saqu. The same man, it has been told, has wrestled a rampaging gorax, ridden bareback on a dracodile, and plucked the spines off a sleeping spine ripper. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I was there to see it all.

The cliffs were much higher, the gorax was a frenzied mother protecting her young, and the spine ripper wasn't sleeping at all. I won't even go into the dracodile—I had my eyes closed half the time!

To say that Professor Pendrake is a man possessed of a thirst for knowledge is to say that a blood-stalker has only a slight taste for human flesh. By any normal standards, Viktor Pendrake is utterly mad. Did I not know him myself, I would think that he must be two different men, indeed.

The man the students know, the professor of renown who has brought the Corvis University such esteem, is a pensive, engaging character who speaks on the subjects of extraordinary beasts with infallible expertise and in a tone so carefully metered that one is nearly lured into a trance-like state by his cavernous voice. The Viktor Pendrake I know, however, the one who pursues the most fearsome inhabitants of this land out of simple curiosity, bears no resemblance to that wizened scholar buried beneath an avalanche of dusty scientific tomes in his dimly lit study.

Pendrake began his life the son of a junker, roaming the borders between Khador and Cygnar, scavenging orphaned machine parts and scrap metal. His interests lay elsewhere, however, and he possessed none of the mechanical acumen of his brothers or father. Often, he was known to wander off from a scavenging party, investigating strange tracks that he had not yet sketched in his journal.

At the still young age of fifteen, Pendrake's wanderlust led him right into the middle of a violent confrontation between skirmishing Khadoran mercenaries and a crippled detachment of Cygnaran outriders pinned down in an almost impassable thicket. Ever quick on his feet, Pendrake led the Cygnaran soldiers to safety, easily traversing trails only known to someone who had haunted the region as thoroughly as young Viktor himself.

His obvious resourcefulness and natural wilderness expertise immediately garnered Pendrake employment in the Cygnaran army as a junior scout. Happy to leave behind the life of a junker, Pendrake joined the scouts and quickly rose through the ranks. He was given command of an entire company of Cygnaran rangers just before his twentieth summer. Sadly, the company would meet a miserable demise, but this event would mark the beginning of a legend.

Pendrake's scout company was deep in the heart of Khador, working a patrol circuit that monitored the deployment of this violent kingdom's most elite units. The scouting company had just completed its assignment, and Pendrake prepared to move his men back to Cygnar, carrying with them vital intelligence desperately needed by the war council back home. A traitor in their ranks, however, sold the company out for a handful of crowns. A full battalion of Khadoran regulars ambushed the scouts, and in the end, all were slain save Pendrake.

With only two parchment tubes containing the critical intelligence grasped in each hand, Pendrake ran for the hills, the cracking report of Khadoran riflfire chasing him. Eventually finding the lowlands, Pendrake wound up caught between a small horde of pygmy trolls and the bloodthirsty battalion. With only his instincts to save him, Pendrake stripped his body bare of his tattered clothes and covered himself in thick mud and leaves. Mimicking the stunted trolls, he waded into their pack and lost himself among their numbers. The Khadorans, seeing little to gain in engaging the scores of creatures, withdrew from the area to continue their search for the elusive scout. For three weeks, Pendrake lived among the pygmy trolls, eating, breathing, and sleeping as one of their kind, until the battalion of regulars gave him up for dead and abandoned their search of the area.

Weeks later, Pendrake dragged his weary form to the gates of a border fortress and handed over the crucial documents. The look of disbelief on the faces of the gate warden is something I myself have grown accustomed to in my eight years as Pendrake's assistant.

For his valor, Pendrake was offered any reward the king could provide. Without hesitation, the brave scout asked only for a sponsorship to Corvis University. The sponsorship was granted immediately, and at the age of twenty-one, Viktor Pendrake became the first Junker ever admitted to the Corvis University, Department of Extraordinary Zoology.

The good Professor Fulger Wynham accepted Pendrake under his wing, perhaps seeing something in him that he missed from his own youth. Pendrake quickly became the professor's most prized student and was given increasingly more prestigious assignments to catalog or recover that—challenges which Pendrake always rose to, seemingly without effort.

Within a few more summers, Pendrake earned his residency at the university and took his place amongst the most elite academics within the realm. In time, Professor Wynham passed on, and his title was bestowed upon the learned Viktor—Professor Pendrake, High Chancellor of the Department of Extraordinary Zoology.

Today, Pendrake divides his time between lecturing the up and coming minds of Corvis University and the pursuit of insanely inspired quests to catalog every wild creature that stalks the hills and forests of Carin. His latest and grandest work, the first volume of the Monsterrumam is now complete, and I dare say that nearly half of those entries came within a fellow's whisker of ending not only the good professor's life, but my own as well.

For now, my path remains tied to Viktor Pendrake, and by Moscow, I hope it is a long path indeed! Though I've never thought of myself as the "field research" type, no scholar worth his salt would walk away from a chance to adventure side by side with the legendary Professor Pendrake. I have seen exotic places that no other man may ever see again, and I have witnessed with my own eyes fearsome monsters engaged in behavior that would turn most men white with terror. But just between myself and the pages of this journal, all of the fantastic beasts that I have seen, Professor Viktor Pendrake may be the most extraordinary creature of them all.

From the memoirs of Lyman Weelsbaum, junior assistant to Professor Viktor Pendrake, University of Carin, Department of Extraordinary Zoology

Combat

In combat, Professor Pendrake is a terror to behold—not for his blustering weapons, nor the bloodlust in his eyes, but rather for his determination and absolute lack of fear. Pendrake usually charges into combat headlong, most often opening up with a volley of arrows, which are followed by close melee combat if possible. Although he is audacious, the professor is quite crafty, and he wins his fights quite often through trickery or manipulation.

His preferred weapons are his composite long bow (his lucky long bow, the first he was commissioned as a junior scout) and his short sword (an ancient relic found on a subterranean quest); both of them are traditional weapons of a Cygmarian ranger. He has also become a master at the elusive aldar's chain—an exotic weapon native to the sailors of Ord. The professor also frequently carries a pistol or rifle with him when in the field, though he admits he has little skill with firearms.

When sheer bravado and melee won't overcome a situation, Pendrake turns to his allies and his resources, both of which are quite extensive. He is also not afraid to admit defeat and retreat when the situation warrants it.

Allies & Enemies

Lyman Wesselbaum (Rgr6/AdvSch1): The professor's senior assistant, Lyman helps Pendrake in most everything he does. Although he possesses the courage of a typical bookwormish student, he can never refuse an adventure at Pendrake's side, and he truly hopes to one day fill the professor's shoes.

Edrea Llorr (Rog4/Sor4): Pendrake's other close assistant, Edrea is quite the opposite of Lyman. Overcome with wanderlust, she left Los to explore the world. Pendrake came upon her in the clutches of a dire troll, and after saving her life he found that he just couldn't get rid of her. Edrea turned out to be as smart as she is adventurous, and the professor has made good use of her help, despite her not being a student. Although open with the professor, Edrea is outwardly shy, aloof, and mysterious (as is typical of an elic) to most she meets. Like Lyman, she is often present when the professor is out in the field.

Saxon Orrik (Rgr16): Once an ally and mentor, Orrik is now one of Pendrake's greatest enemies. The professor studied under him when first indoctrinated into the Cygmarian military, and Orrik taught Pendrake much of what he knows of being a ranger. Their relationship were well until Pendrake blew the whistle on Orrik for committing a number of atrocities in the course of his duties. Orrik is a power-hungry warrior who, despite being ejected from the military (circumstantial evidence prevented full conviction), still serves as one of Vinter
Professor Pendrake

BASILISK'S most loyal troops (currently serving him alongside the Skorne). He thanks Pendrake a fool for devoting his work to postergy and would gladly teach the "boy" a lesson, should he have the chance.

Thain Raleah (Wiz12): Thain is a distinguished member of the Corvis branch of the Fraternal Order of Wizanents. His exploits as a wizard are quite well known, and he has made himself a welcome adventuring partner to Pendrake many times (the two get along famously). He has also been helpful in procuring access for Pendrake to the order's extensive library. Those who have played The Longest Night will remember Thain as one of the three wizards romping through the streets, fighting off the hordes of thralls during the Longest Night massacre (TLN 51).

Natalia Casale (Art16): Natalia is the wife of one of the most powerful merchants in Corvis and all of Cygnar for that matter); and she secretly runs its operation through her spineless, puppet husband. Although a ruthless woman, she has proved a useful resource to Pendrake, who has in turn pulled various favors for her company. She also draws quite a bit of water in the circles of Corvis's wealthy elite.

Equen "Chilly" Velshmanker (Rog7): While he's not the type one would find at a high society gathering, Chilly is still a well-connected man in Corvis and beyond. His knowledge of Corvis's underworld and—most importantly—the traffic coming in and out of the city is extensive, and Pendrake relies on him for many tips. He can typically be found loafing around the docks.

Mitchel Filkins (Ftr8): One of Corvis's finest, Mitchel is a proud member of the Corvis watch. In many ways he's a bit of a misfit, but he has been around long enough to see everything the city has to offer. He knows every nook and cranny of the ancient city (above and below ground); as well as the faces and rap sheets of most of the town's crooks. Filkins assists Pendrake frequently on his Corvis-based runs, and provides other services as he is able.

Professor Viktor Pendrake

Male human Rgr5/Adv Sch9; CR 14; Size M (5 ft., 11 in. tall); HD 3d10+9d6+42; hp 123; Int +2 (Dec); Spd 30 ft.; AC 24 (+17 armor, +2 Dex, +5 Cha); Atk +15/+10/+5 melee (1d6+4/crit 19–20 x2, short sword); or +14/+9/+5 melee (1d4+3/crit 19–20 x2, dagger); or +14/+9/+4 ranged (1d4+4/crit 19–20 x2, aldar's chain, see below); or +17/+12/+7 ranged (1d8+1/crit x3, composite longbow).

Languages Spoken: Cygnan, Cygan, Khadorn, Molgar (Molgar-truel dialect), Orthic, Qorian, Syr.

Skills and Feats: Animal Empathy +15, Balance +16, Climb +5, Craft (small arms) +5, Creature Lore +22, Decipher Script +11, Diplomacy +8, Gather Information +12, Handle Animal +14, Heal +4, Hide +8, Intimidate +8, Intuit Direction +6, Jump +3, Knowledge (tactics) +14, Knowledge (geography) +14, Listen +9, More Silently +8, Profession (professor) +12, Ride +3, Search +9, Spot +9, Swim +5, Use Rope +6, Wilderness Lore +16; Alertness, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (aldar's chain), Point Blank Shot, Rapid Shot, Songs and Stories (humanoids and monstrous humanoids), Sages and Stories (undead), Skill Focus (Creature Lore), Track, Unearthed Arcana (aberrations), Unearthed Arcana (dragons), Unearthed Arcana (beasts and magical beasts).

Clerical Spells: Professor Pendrake utilizes an optional spell-less ranger class that will be released in a future Iron Kingdoms product.

Special Abilities:

Favored Enemy: Gobbers, trolls. (Note that this represents more of a deep knowledge and understanding of these creatures garnered through experience, rather than a burning desire to hunt them.)

Favored Terrain: Forest. This grants a +1 bonus to Hide, Intuit Direction, Move Silently, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks in his favored terrain and also reduces the terrain movement penalties in the favored terrain to the next highest fraction (x1/4 becomes x1/2, x1/2 becomes x3/4, and x3/4 becomes x1).

Field of Study: Field Scholar of zoology

Base of Operations: Cygnan Royal University's Corvis branch; Title: High Chancellor of the Department of Extraordinary Zoology

Scholarly Reputation Score: +13; Works written: The Gobbers of Caen, a twelve-part series (currently seven volumes complete, each +1 tome of gobbler-specific lore); Genera and Species of the Southern Trolls (+2 tome of troll-specific lore); On the Habits of the Dragon's Tongue and Black River Humanoinds (+1 tome of monstrous humanoid lore); Training Techniques for the Two-handed Argyon (+2 tome of argylon lore); Scattered Notes on the Nature of the Umbra River (unpublished, +1 tome outside lore).

Equipment: +4 enchanted dragonhide armor (+7 total AG, +3 base AG, +4 magical enhancement, no armor check penalty); +3 ancient Oorghh blade (slashing, +3 enhancement bonus); +2 fog drake Fang dagger, aldar's chain, Orich, sailors' chain weapon with weight at one end and harpoon-like book/spear at other end; may use all special abilities of spikelike chain, though considered a ranged weapon; Cygnan scout's bow, the professor's lucky bow (composite longbow, +3 luck enhancement).
callous fingers ran through gray hair, pausing to scratch an aged scalp. The man sighed, then looked back up at the lock he’d been studying for three minutes. It was set in a massive bronzed metal door. covered with overgrowth, and bearing religious symbols lost to most.

“Well, can we get in?” A young man asked in a not-so-enthusiased voice. He was wearing a large backpack and fidgeting heavily as he stood behind the old man. “Professor Fincher...?”

The old man stood up, wiping the sweat from his eyes with the backs of his sleeves before putting his glasses back on. Although his faded, straggly hair and wrinkled skin spoke of many years, his steady gate and firm posture told of a confidence that knew no frailty. “Kootler, give me the hammer,” he barked, his bearded face showing no patience.

The young man dropped his backpack and began rooting clumsily through it. “This hammer?” He asked a moment later, handing it to him.

“Well, how many did you bring, boy?”
The youth looked confused. “Just that one, sir.”
The professor stared at him, arms crossed, for a long pause. The boy squirmed. “Well, are ya goin’ to give me the spike, boy?”

“Spike? Spike...” He rooted frantically through the pack. “You didn’t say—”

“By Morrow, boy. Do you know how many course credits you’re getting for being my assistant?” The boy kept rooting.
Adventuring Scholar Prestige Class

...through the pack. "Stop that and give me your dagger." The professor grabbed the boy and stood him up, taking the dagger from his belt himself.

With dagger and hammer, the professor stepped up to the door and began pounding on what appeared to be a locking mechanism. He struck several times, each time harder than the last, but the great steel door didn't budge. "Blasted, infernal temple!" The professor cursed. "Couldn't leave a key in a place that wouldn't sink under a swamp, so now you got to make me do it the hard way, eh?" He brought the hammer down with a vengeance, this time snapping the blade right in two. With an angered howl and one swift motion the professor tossed the hammer aside, pulled out a stout pistol, and blasted the door.

Despite the rolling echo of gunfire, the click of the trap switch going off could still be heard. A volley of arrows blasted from a dozen holes in the door, peppering the air with darts. The assistant shrieked and fell backwards against a tree. He lay there motionless, his sweat glistening on his skin, and several moments later was picked up by a set of hands and manhandled to the ground.

"Get up, boy. Damn it, we haven't got all day," the professor demanded. There were several darts sticking out of the professor's clothes, but he seemed completely unharmed. The boy looked up and saw the professor's hat nailed to the tree above him by two darts. The boy glared at his professor as if he was a mental patient. He was stuffing items back into the boy's pack, seemingly unaware of the near fatality that just occurred.

Before he could speak or argue, Kootler was being shoved into the now open doorway. "Come on, son. No time to dally. Remember, we're doing this for science," the professor said before stepping into the temple himself and shutting the door behind them. As the boy plunged into the cobwebbed darkness ahead, he missed all too late that this was definitely not what he had imagined when signing up for a "semester of intrigue and adventure" as a professor's assistant.

"If you think that was fun, boy, just wait till we wake the bane thralls up," the professor commented almost enthusiastically as he patted the boy on the back, shoving him farther into the darkness.

Description

All of us thirst for knowledge to some degree, yet for those whom we call scholars that thirst develops into a passion that shapes and encompasses their lives. For most scholars, this means years of intense study, keeping locked up in a bedroom, study, or library surrounded by tomes, charts, and other curiosities. For the adventuring scholar, this just isn't enough. They need to experience their passion for knowledge firsthand, and their hunger for that knowledge often takes them to places undreamed of by most. After all, somebody has to visit all those strange places they write about in those many books.

Adventuring scholars are a special breed. They have spent years in study, and they most often hold some sort of mundane position at a university or museum, but they are by no means bookworms. They are hearty adventurers that can run with the best of them—only instead of exploring the mystery-

---

Table 1-1: The Adventuring Scholar

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class Level</th>
<th>Bonus Attack</th>
<th>Fort Save</th>
<th>Ref Save</th>
<th>Will Save</th>
<th>Luck Bonus*</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Against All Odds

Special

Field of study (field specialist +2/+1), base of operations, against all odds
Exotic weapon feat
Bonus language
Adventurer's seal
Easy allies, field scholar (+4/+2; may take 10)
Bonus language
Plus scholarly work
Easy allies (improved)
Bonus language
Field master (+6/+3; may take 20)
ies of the world in search of treasure or power, they do it for knowledge. The primary tools of the adventuring scholar are wit, determination, knowledge, and a touch of both brains and luck. With these they delve the mysteries of the world, unlocking secrets that few would dare to fathom.

In the Iron Kingdoms

Adventuring scholars in the Iron Kingdoms come in all varieties. The Iron Kingdoms boast several major centers of higher learning, including the Caspian Royal Academy, Corvis University, the University of Meric, the Merrywyn Academy, the Merin School of Learned Sciences, Fedek University (in Ceryl), and more. While there are many professors at these universities, only a few have what it takes to be an adventuring scholar. Of course, they aren't restricted to institutions of learning. Adventuring scholars can be found working independently, hiring out to wealthy patrons, or even doing research for large guilds (for example, The Steam and Iron Worker's Union has contracted adventuring scholars on several occasions to assist in private metallurgy research).

Table 1-2 Easy Allies

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Currently Neutral</th>
<th>Friend</th>
<th>Confidant</th>
<th>Ally</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Antagonist</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Neutral</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friend</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Confidant</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ally</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Notable Persons

Lorant Neci (ArtS/AdvSch6): Lorant is one of the world's foremost historians and, in particular, is the most learned scholar on the Osogoth Empire in all of the Iron Kingdoms. He is also one of the most prodigious scholars about when it comes to penning scholarly works, and his tomes range far and wide, having been translated into several languages across the kingdoms. He works primarily out of The Merin School of Learned Sciences (a small academy, but one that has secured some powerful independent financing and has been able to do some important work because of it), but he does a great deal of traveling throughout the kingdoms. He has contacts in every major university in the land, and many people seek him out for his counsel on all matters historic. He is also known for being wound very tight for a bookish type and is prone to losing his temper.

Coriander Jagus (Sor7/AdvSch5): Coriander Jagus is among the few adventuring scholars who has made creature lore his area of expertise. He grew up in Caspia, the son of a respected professor. Coriander, however, did not have his father's patience for the classroom, and when he began discovering his natural talent for magic, he began to discover his love for running where the wild things run.

Table 1-3 Scholarly Works

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Level of Tome</th>
<th>Tome Bonus</th>
<th>DC</th>
<th>Length of Reput</th>
<th>Reputation Bonus</th>
<th>Maximum Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Basic</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>2 months</td>
<td>+1/2</td>
<td>12 works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advanced</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>6 months</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>8 works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Master</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>31</td>
<td>1 year</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>5 works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grand Master</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>37</td>
<td>3 years</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>3 works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Legendary</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>42</td>
<td>10 years</td>
<td>+10</td>
<td>1 work</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

"Level of Tome" indicates the level of the knowledge put into the work.

"Tome Bonus" indicates the bonus that the tome will bear once the work is finished (see "Tomes," pp 210 for more info).

"DC" indicates the difficulty class of the challenge, and "Length of Time" indicates how much time must be spent in the creation attempt.

"Reputation Bonus" indicates the bonus to the adventuring scholar's Scholarly Reputation once the work is completed, and "Maximum Number" indicates the maximum number of times this bonus may be applied to the scholar's score. A scholar may create tomes beyond this maximum, but he no longer gains any bonus to his Scholarly Reputation score.
Adventuring Scholar Prestige Class

Field Scholar: At 5th level the adventuring scholar is considered as a true scholar in his or her field. The competence and synergy bonuses for this ability rise to +4/+2 respectively. The scholar may also now take 10 on any Knowledge or Lore skill roll related to their field of study, even if circumstances would normally prohibit him from doing so.

Field Master: At 10th level the scholar is a master of his or her field. Their bonuses rise to +6/+3 respectively, and they may now take 20 on any Knowledge or Lore skill roll related to their field of study, regardless of circumstances.

Base of Operations: The adventuring scholar also starts off with some form of base of operations. This place is almost invariably tied to the scholar's profession and is usually a university, museum, or similar institution of culture or knowledge. The scholar may draw upon this place for resources (within reason), but he must also pay it the respects he would any other place of employment. Adventuring scholars who abuse their role may have it revoked (at the DM's discretion). This starting point is usually the beneficiary of most of the scholar's studies and trophies from the field. Although scholars may be sponsored by a wealthy benefactor, they may not sponsor themselves, even though they may bear the weight of doing so.

Along with this base of operations comes a Scholarly Reputation score. This score is measured in ranks, just as a skill, and may be added as a circumstance bonus to Charisma-based rolls (such as Diplomacy skill rolls or attempts to influence NPC attitudes [Table 1-2 below]; it does not influence extraordinary, supernatural, or spell-like abilities) to influence fellow scholars, students, aristocrats, and other educated individuals who would be aware of the scholar's work and importance to the scholarly community. The base modifier for this ability is equal to the adventuring scholar's competence bonus as a specialist, scholar, or master of his field (+2, +4, or +6 respectively), though it may be raised by penning scholarly tomes (see below).

Against All Odds (Ex): Adventuring scholars are known for many things, but their luck is legendary. An adventuring scholar gains a luck bonus that applies to all saving throws (see chart on Table 1-1). It grows as the adventuring scholar increases in level, though the bonuses are not cumulative (at 3rd level it is +1; at 7th level it is +3, etc).

Exotic Weapon: In their travels, adventuring scholars are known to pick up all sorts of unusual knowledge and abilities. At 2nd level they gain a free exotic weapon feat. Choice of weapons varies greatly, although versatile and clever weapons are the most favored.

Bonus Languages: In their immense amount of study, adventuring scholars pick up many languages. They gain a bonus language at levels 3, 6, and 9.

Adventurer's Zeal (Ex): At 3rd level the adventuring scholar...
Adventuring Scholar Prestige Class

Adventuring scholars gain the adventurer's zeal, a thirst for adventure that pushes him beyond his normal limits through sheer bravery. He may now add his Charisma bonus to his AC. This bonus represents a supernatural level of courage and occasional wanton abandon. This bonus applies even when wearing armor, as well as when flat-footed. It does not apply if the scholar is immobilized.

Easy Allies (Ex): Adventuring scholars are also well known for their ability to find low or make new allies just about anywhere. In any populated location, the scholar may make a Gather Information roll to see if he can locate an existing ally or create a new one. Use the Easy Allies Table (1-2) below to determine the DC of the roll; first find where the NPC (either the individual being affected or the general level of the local populace) fails in the "Currently" column, then take the roll. The scholar may add his Gather Information ranks, as well as a +5 competence bonus, to the roll (in addition to the Cha bonus). Look across the line to find the highest DC beaten by the roll. The most positive attitude level achieved with the roll is the type of ally found, but at this level the "Ally" column is ignored (a Confidant is the highest that may be achieved). This relationship usually only lasts the duration of a particular scene or act of an adventure, although if roleplayed properly it may last longer. DMs are encouraged to mind the limits to which NPCs will be willing to go to help people; a Friend, for example, wouldn't be willing to take a fall for a PC, while an Ally must definitely would.

This roll may only be made once per location, per visit, and it may not be used more than once on the same NPC (and may only be used on a particular NPC at the DM's discretion; against many it won't be applicable). The scholar may not take 10 or 20 on this roll. It is up to the DM whether the ally found is an existing acquaintance who happened to be in the same area or if it is a new ally altogether.

At 8th level the adventuring scholar's ability to find allies increases. Use the same chart as before (Table 1-2), but this time successes in the "Ally" column are not ignored. Success in this column indicates that the scholar has made a lasting ally that will continue to help the character well beyond the current adventure. Furthermore, the scholar may increase the competence bonus to +10. The same restrictions apply.

Pen Scholarly Work: At 7th level the adventuring scholar may attempt to increase his Scholarly Reputation ranks (see "Base of Operations" above) by writing scholarly texts. To write a text the scholar must invest a great deal of time into research, study, writing, and revising. The length of time depends on the complexity and depth intended to be covered by the text; this also determines the DC to create the text.

Consult the following chart and make a Knowledge roll. The scholar absolutely must have the specific Knowledge skill relating to the subject of the intended text. If this text is within his field of study, then his field competence bonus applies to the roll as well. No synergy bonuses apply, and 10 or 20 may not be taken. The roll is made at the end of the period of work, and failure indicates a waste of time (the work is incomplete, inconsistent, or just plain wrong in some way), although the scholar may attempt the work again with a +5 competence bonus due to the previous research (no shorter time, though). Additional adventuring and work may be done during this work period, but only very briefly; the scholarly work must be the main focus during this time.
Bone Grinder Prestige Class

W e hadn't even been out in the bush for two weeks before we'd found them—a pack of gorax. We came across them in a clearing a night's shot north of the Dragon's Tongue, and the bastards were a hungry lot. They'd taken down a Saevian buffalo and were tearing it to shreds. Just how that poor beast had wandered this far I'll never know, and seeing as it was half-eaten, I doubt I'd ever find out.

"There, the big one, the one with the red stripe, that's the one I want," the dark lanky one said to me tugging on my coat. He called himself a bone grinder, and the scions be damned if I knew what shore he washed up from. By his dress I'd say it was a far cry, and by his manners, I'd say it was even farther. But he was paying good money, and my ill luck at the time prompted a need for the job.

"That's not a stripe, you fool, that's his lunch," I said. But the fool didn't seem to care. He was eyeing the beast up and rubbing his hands together, watching it with that one big eye and a feral grin.

I turned to the men. They were a sorry bunch of Khadoran ex-pariahs, but they came with their own longarms, which meant they were good enough for this job. "Alright boys, let's take 'em out. Leave big red to me!"

Before the smell of rifle shot had even cleared my nostrils he was in there, standing over the twitching gorax that had been feasting a moment ago. With a shallow, eager chuckle he produced a long, jagged knife and went to work. A moment later, his hands dripping slippery red, he lifted up and beheld a large freshly severed heart.

"Oh, yes," the lanky one cackled, "This will do quite nicely..."

—Master hunter Alten Ashley

Description

Bone grinders are a mysterious lot to say the least. They are magical practitioners who shun traditional alchemy and seek to perfect their own secret arts by curing and magically preparing body parts. They come from distant lands and guard their knowledge carefully and jealously. They are known (among those few who know of them) for their spell components that can enhance spells as well as their handy magical charms, and bone grinders are not afraid to turn their abilities towards making a profit. Their magical tokens and spell-enhancing concoctions are well respected and tend to fetch a high price because of their rarity.

Most bone grinders split their time between adventuring and creating tokens and components. They are more skilled in combat than most spell-casters, but only by comparison. Most bone grinders are smart enough to ally with a band of adventurers or hire one to accompany them on their treks. They always participate in their own monster hunts, both so that they may trust their own instincts in finding the right creature and so that they may extract any body parts themselves. A bone grinder never buys secondhand parts.

Bone grinders are usually regarded with suspicion, sometimes fear, and curiosity at best. They are usually not well liked by other magical tradesmen for the competition they bring to the market. Their tokens are easily used by all, and their spell enhancers are well-liked by those spell-casters who have discovered them. Thus competitive apprehension is compounded by the cold indifference bone grinders tend to treat most with.
casters are a curious lot, and it's quite frustrating when a fellow magician keeps his secrets so well kept.

In the Iron Kingdoms

The bone grinders of the Iron Kingdoms are silent and mysterious. It is believed that they originated from somewhere on the Scharde Islands, though precisely where is unknown. There has been no evidence suggesting they either are or aren't tied to the Lord of the Wyrm. It is known that their appearance in the Iron Kingdoms is somewhat recent, though, again, just why that is remains unknown. They have been encountered primarily in Cygnar and Khador, although their reputation for wide-ranging monster hunts is already becoming established.

The Fraternal Order of Wizardry has a very high interest in the bone grinders, and several of their members have already come to know their enhancing spell components. Use of these concoctions, however, has been banned by the order until their true nature (and more about the bone grinders themselves) can be learned. The highly secretive Thaumaturgical Brotherhood of the Arcane (a small society of alchemists based in Khazar) is also very interested in the bone grinders, although they are split between a desire to learn their secrets and that to eliminate some potential business competitors.

Notable Figures

Terill Thayer (Wiz7/BnGr6): Terill is a bone grinder who has been selling his wares out of Corvis over the past several months. Except for his appearance—that of an oily, dark-skinned man with a strangely angular frame—he hasn't been noticed by too many of the citizens. But there are those with much more than a passing interest in this stranger. The local Fraternal Order of Wizardry has taken note of him and has been buying things from him to experiment on. Other more nefarious individuals have noticed as well, and Terill has been the target of several lethal encounters. Due to a rather unusual circumstance, he managed to make an alliance with the Gertens crime family, the consequences of which could be anyone's guess.

Lysimache Marpessa (Wiz8/BnGr1): The daughter of a wealthy Caspian socialite who enjoyed little more than doing on his daughter (having seen his wife pass away), Lysimache has been afforded many advantages in life that women are not typically offered. Her study of wizardry is a prime example of this. Though quite intelligent and an apt student, Lysimache has a wild streak that can't be tamed. Her adventures have taken her wide and far, and they have made her the Iron Kingdoms' foremost expert on bone grinders. She has traveled with several and has even begun to learn some of their skills. She has also learned their right lip and isn't spilling any of the beans. Just what she plans to do with her newfound knowledge is anyone's guess.

The Bone Grinder

Hit Die: d6

Requirements

To qualify to become a bone grinder, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

---

Table 1-1: The Bone Grinder

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class Level</th>
<th>Attack Bonus</th>
<th>Fort Save</th>
<th>Ref Save</th>
<th>Will Save</th>
<th>Special</th>
<th>Spells</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>Track, favored monster, bone grinding (enhancers)</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>Bonus feat, bone grinding (tokens)</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>Favoried monster</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>Bonus feat</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>Bonus feat</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>Favoried monster</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>Bonus feat</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>Favoried monster</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>Bonus feat</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>Favoried monster</td>
<td>+1 level of existing class</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bone Grinder Prestige Class

Knowledge (arcana): 6 ranks.
Creature Lore: 5 ranks.
Craft (deception): 4 ranks.
Wilderness Lore: 4 ranks.
Alchemy: 4 ranks.
Feat: At least one metamagic feat.
Spells: The ability to cast arcane spells of 3rd level or greater.
Special: Must find a bone grinder and convince him to teach you his secrets. Good luck.

Class Skills
Alchemy (Int), Concentration (Con), Craft (bone grinding) (Int, exclusive skill), Creature Lore (Int), Decipher Script (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Intuit Direction (Wis), Knowledge (any) (Int), Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (bone grinder) (Wis), Search (Int), Speak Language (Int), Spellcraft (Int), Spot (Wis), Wilderness Lore (Wis).

Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

Class Features
Track: Bone grinders receive Track as a bonus feat.
Favored Monster (Ex): At 1st level, a bone grinder may select a favored monster type. This is a creature type that the bone grinder is more familiar with, having gained a greater insight into its habits, mannerisms, and usefulness. They gain a +1 bonus to Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks versus a creature of that type. This bonus also applies to damage rolls, though ranged attacks only gain the bonus when within 30 feet. Additionally, it may be added to Craft (bone grinding) rolls when crafting with parts of a favored monster.

At 5th and 10th levels, the bone grinder may select a new favored monster type, and his previous bonuses rise by an additional +1.

Bone Grinding (Su): This is a bone grinder's trademark ability. With it he can create magical enhancers and later magical tokens. Creation of these items is similar to the creation of other magical items, but a bit easier in some ways. In all cases, the cost of the item is set at the discretion of the bone grinder. Guidelines for price are listed in the enhancer and token descriptions below, and most bone grinders follow those. Costs to the bone grinder himself vary widely, and usually involve far more labor than financial investment.

All creation attempts involve a Craft (bone grinding) roll. All items also have an XP cost, which works as it does for an item creation feat, although the costs are much lower. On a failed Craft (bone grinding) roll the bone grinder makes no progress this session. If the character fails by five or more, the bone grinder ruins the raw materials and has to pay half the original XP cost (rounded up).

Spell Enhancers
Bone grinders are most well known by their fellow magical practitioners for their spell enhancers. These enhancements usually take the form of some ground up concoction, although there is a great deal of variation (sometimes it might be a charm, sometimes it might be a paste, etc.).

Using Enhancers
Every enhancer has the effect of duplicating a metamagic feat. Any arcane spellcaster can use them, and they are used as material components when casting the spell. In all cases the enhancer is used up in the casting.

The spell is cast as if the spell-caster himself possessed and had used the feat in question. If the feat for some reason has prerequisites, then the user must meet those prerequisites to use the enhancer.

The cost in spell slots listed in the metamagic feat is multiplied by 1.5 rounded up (for most it goes from +1 to +2).

Do note that if the arcane caster is required to prepare spells ahead of time, then this enhancement must be incorporated into the preparation (thus increasing the spell slots it takes up). If the caster decides to cast the spell without enhancing it, then it uses up a lower level slot, but only if one is free; if one is not, then it uses the original higher slot.

Creation Restrictions
The HD of the monster the body part came from must be at least twice that of the spell it is used to modify. For example, you’d need a part from a 4 HD monster to boost a 2nd-level spell.

The feat the enhancer emulates is set at its creation. It does not make any difference if the spell-caster using the enhancer possesses the feat. The bone grinder creating it, however, must have the feat in question. Only one feat is ever included in any particular enhancer, although multiple enhancements can be used simultaneously (remember, spell slot costs stack).

Only parts from monsters of certain types will enhance certain schools of magic. Those listed in parentheses are for non-Iron Kingdoms campaigns only, as the IK uses some creature types differently than other settings. The match-up is as follows:

Abjuration: Beasts, Beasts, constructs, dragons
Conjuration: Magical beasts, Magical beasts, outsiders, dragons
Divination: Animals, plants, Animals, plants, elements
Bone Grinder Prestige Class

Enchantment: Fey, (Fey, dragons)
Evocation: Monstrous humanoid (Monstrous humanoid, giants, dragons)
Illusion: Aberration, fey (Aberration, fey, dragons)
Necromancy: Undead (Undead, vermin, dragons)
Transmutation: Shapechangers (Shapechangers, ooze, dragons)

Exactly what body part is used does not matter incredibly; it's more an issue of flavor. The only restriction is that it must be a major organ or feature, and the bone grinder must remove it himself. A typical body part lasts 2d4 days before it becomes too rotted to use; a curing agent may be added to the part that extends that period to 2d4 weeks, but this adds +3 per week to the DC of the Craft (bone grinding) check to work it.

Creation Costs and DC

The process of creating the enhancer involves both the application of strange curing agents and the working of mystical energies. These agents typically cost one tenth of the cost of the item. The creation process need not take place in a lab, but the bone grinder must have all of his materials present and be left relatively undisturbed for the duration of the process.

Creating any enhancer costs the bone grinder a number of daily spell slots equal to the HD of the creature part he was working with; these slots are not used up if the Craft (bone grinding) check fails.

XP Cost: 5 per HD of the creature being crafted from Craft (bone grinding) DC: 15
Time: 4 hours

Tokens

At 3rd level the bone grinder may begin crafting tokens from creature body parts. Tokens are minor magical items that typically grant some form of slight bonus. Unlike enhancers they may be used by anyone, not just spell-casters. They are not "used up" like enhancers, but they do have a limited duration. When that duration expires, the token loses its property; an expired token may not be re-enhanced.

The primary restriction is that only two lesser tokens or one greater token can be used at any given time (identical tokens do not stack with each other). Any tokens worn beyond that fail to function. All tokens have a duration, so it's best to purchase them shortly after they're crafted.

There are two levels of tokens that may be created—lesser and greater—the differences of which are pretty obvious. In creation, a token is made similar to how an enhancer is made, except that the body part in question is usually fashioned into something that can be easily worn or carried.

A Craft (bone grinding) check must still be made and an XP cost paid as well. Lesser tokens can be made of creatures of any HD, while greater tokens must be made from creatures of 6 HD or greater. There is no restriction in regards to creature type, though common sense should be used. A monkey's paw could conceivably be fashioned into a token that grants a bonus to climbing, but it probably couldn't be fashioned into a token that boosts AC. The same restrictions apply to tokens as they do to enhancers as far as body part freshness goes (and curing them to keep them fresh). Creating a token drains a bone grinder of four spell level slots per lesser token and eight spell level slots per greater token.

Lesser Token

XP Cost: 50
Craft (bone grinding) DC: 15
Time: 5 hours
HD Requirement: Any
Duration: 2d4+1 days
Sample abilities (choose one):
+3 to all skill checks on any one skill
+1 to any one stat
+1 to any one type of save (vs. illusions, poisons, etc.)
+1 to all melee attacks
+1 to all ranged attacks
+1 to AC

Greater Tokens

XP Cost: 500
Craft (bone grinding) DC: 20
Time: 8 hours
HD Requirement: 6 HD or greater
Duration: 4d6+3 days
Sample abilities (choose one):
+6 to all skill checks on any one skill
+2 to any one stat
+2 to any one type of save (ex: vs. illusions, vs. poisons, vs. disease, etc.)
+3 to all melee attacks
+3 to all ranged attacks
+2 to AC
User gains scent; special quality
User cannot be frightened or panicked (can still be shaken)
User heals at double the normal rate
Example Spell Enhancers & Tokens

Spell enhancers are usually very difficult to come by because of the reclusive nature of the bone grinder. Even when one is found, availability is even further limited by what the bone grinder has in stock (which is limited by what he has hunted down recently). Pricing tends to be around 50 gp per HD of the creature and up. Add between 500 and 3,000 gp if the creature is a particularly dangerous or rare one.

Sample Enhancers

Griffin Heart (Still Spell): This rouge powder will enhance any Abjuration spell of 3rd-level or lower with the Still Spell feat. The user will have to use a spell slot two levels higher to use this enhancer. Price: 400 gp.

Harp Blood (Extend Spell): A vial of this tart ochre will enhance any Evocation spell of 3rd-level or lower with the Extend Spell feat. The user will have to use a spell slot two levels higher to use this enhancer. Price: 500 gp.

Mummy Spleen (Silent Spell): This cured organ will enhance any Necromancy spell of 3rd-level or lower with the Silent Spell feat. The user will have to use a spell slot two levels higher to use this enhancer. Price: 550 gp.

Tokens

As with enhancers, price varies on tokens per their availability, which tends to be sparse. A bone grinder will typically charge between 200 and 1000 gp for a lesser token and between 1000 and 3000 gp for a greater token. Mind you, much will depend on the bone grinder’s particular circumstance and the buyer’s apparent need.

Remember that only two lesser tokens or one greater token may be worn at one time. Identical tokens do not stack.

Sample Tokens Lesser

Shark’s Tooth: +3 to all arm checks
Badger Skull: +1 to Constitution
Eagle’s Eye: +3 to all Spot checks
Ghoul Bones: +1 to save vs. Necromancy spells

Sample Tokens Greater

Troll’s Tongue: User gains poison resistance 5
Sphinx’s Heart: User gains spell resistance 5
Rhinoceros Horn: +2 to AC
Polar Bear Snout: User gains scent special quality

I found this most curious note in the loot of a recently departed bone grinder. Most interesting... W.P.

- A paint of hot troll blood
- 10 slings of troll blood
- 15 body parts (no protector)
- 1 cask of tongues
- 1 gill dragon skull
- 3 complete sets of favored bones
- 6 pounds of Russian buffalo year
- 4 buzzard tails
- 10 dragon fish livers

- Our Resolutions, Whole and Undamaged... The list...
My daughter was one of the first to go. It wasn't until four more had gone that we realized we were being hunted. We didn't really know much about them, except that being hunted by them meant certain death, at least for the likes of us. Soon a stranger passed through and told us that they were called spine rippers and that it was unusual for a band of them to set up shop like this. He was the sixth to go.

It wasn't until they had killed a dozen and a half of us that we found help. He too was a stranger in our town, but as we came to know, he had followed the spine rippers here. He was an odd one. I had that eerie silence about him, that kind of quiet a man gets when he's been out alone in the wilds far too long. He had long, ragged dark hair and more scars than I'd seen on any man. I'm sure that each bore an exotic tale. His dress smelt of Khadoran, but I'd say that the man was from Cygnar based on his accent. With him he brought a sack loaded with parts and pieces for making traps, and he had slung across his shoulder a rifle the likes of which I've never seen in all my days. His price was a thousand crowns plus expenses, and we had little choice but to pay it.

Young Brenner went with the stranger, to show him where the creatures had attacked and been seen. Even in town we could hear their cries and howls, those feral beasts baying as they became the hunted, their calls being drowned out only by the crack of rifle shot as they were hounded through trap and ambush alike. He came back before the night was even through, Brenner in tow, his face ghost white.

The man threw down a bundle of severed heads, seven of them, their tongues all lolling out, their beastly faces beaded in final terror. "A thousand crowns," he said, his face like slate. "And my horse needs restocking. I leave in the morning."

I'd much rather he sit and told us the story of how he'd slain these seven beasts who'd plagued us for so long, but as we say around Skizov, "When a man saves your neck, don't expect him to put your back." In either case, with enough liquor we eventually coaxed it out of poor Brenner. Come closer, and let me tell you of this amazing hunter. His name was Adagin Bracht...

—Morgov Kelmak, Waiting Stars Inn of Skizov

Description

Most people run away from monsters. Call it fear, call it common sense, call it what you will, running to safety is the first thing most people think to do when threatened by a wild beast (or worse). Well, monster hunters tend to have just the opposite reaction. They make their living in hunting down the beasts of the wild. They are expert trackers and able warriors, and they tend to be far more at home out on the trail, sleeping in the mud and in the cold, than in any cushy inn or study. Needless to say, they are also some of the most fearless fighters in all the land.

Just what motivates the individual monster hunter varies quite a bit. Some live or grew up in areas where wild creatures of some sort were a constant threat, and they took up arms to fight the predators. Many suffered some sort of trauma early on at the hands of a wild beast and have dedicated themselves to eliminating such threats. Still others are adventurers with an indomitable wild streak who thrive on themselves becoming the greatest predators.

!Legendary hunter Aizen Ashley
Monster Hunter Prestige Class

In the Iron Kingdoms

Most monster hunters in the Iron Kingdoms are found somewhere on the fringes of society, many within Cygnar and Khador, with greater concentrations in untamed regions such as the Wyrmeil Mountains and Thornwood Forest. A great deal of them will be found as the lead huntsman of a small band mercenaries or cohorts. In Cygnar, most local magistrates will pay monster hunters for their services, though the particulars vary a great deal. In Khador, monster hunters find that they must contract themselves to the military as specialized mercenaries if they want to see pay; the contracts tend to be quite loose, however, so there’s little difference in how they operate.

There are very few cases of organized monster hunters in the Iron Kingdoms. Most are short-lived parties that disband afterwards. The Gray Blades of Osk still exist today (having been founded originally to fight off a heavy population of nearby trolls), although they function more as an elite mercenary group, only occasionally taking on monster-related jobs (only a few members are true monster hunters).

Notable Persons

Altien Ashley (RGr9/MonHtr7): Altien Ashley is perhaps the best known monster hunter in the Iron Kingdoms. He has hunted in virtually every hostile environment of known Caer, and he has more tales to tell of distant lands than most men would garner in five lifetimes. He has also hunted just about every kind of creature one could imagine... and many one could not. The only thing that comes close to exceeding Ashley’s reputation for hunting is his reputation for obnoxiousness. While certainly not mean spirited, he’s so boisterous and gregarious that he who meet him would just as soon leave him to his monsters.

Arturo “Trollslayer” Kasimir (Ftr8/MonHtr6): Arturo is the leader of the Grey Blades, a mercenary group based out of Osk. The group was originally founded to combat a heavy population of trolls in the area, but once the menace was secured, the group stayed together and sold their services as mercenaries. Today, they have become well known for their exploits both as mercenaries and as exterminators. Arturo is one of the most skilled monster hunters among them and is an excellent leader and tactician. He was born a poor farmer and saw his entire family butchered and eaten by trolls, save for his niece Eva (who he dotes on endlessly whenever he has the chance, despite her being a grown woman now). This prompted him to become a monster hunter, and his ferocity in battle has earned him the nickname Trollslayer. In battle he wields the legendary hammer Trollkill, which is capable (among other things) of overcoming any troll’s regeneration ability.

The Monster Hunter

Hit Die d10

Requirements

To qualify to become a monster hunter, a character must fulfill all of the following criteria.

Table 1-1: The Monster Hunter

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class Level</th>
<th>Attack Bonus</th>
<th>Fort Save</th>
<th>Ref Save</th>
<th>Will Save</th>
<th>Special</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>Special</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>+0</td>
<td>Favored monster, improved track +1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>Skilled trapper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>Skilled trapper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+4</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>+1</td>
<td>Favored monster</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>Exotic weapon proficiency, improved track +1 / scent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+5</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>Penetrating blow +1d6+1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>+8</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>+2</td>
<td>Fearless</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>+9</td>
<td>+6</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>Penetrating blow +1d6+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>+10</td>
<td>+7</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>+3</td>
<td>Exotic weapon proficiency, improved track +1 / immunity</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

230
Base Attack Bonus: +4.
Creature Lore: 5 ranks.
Wilderness Lore: 6 ranks.
Feat: Skill Focus (wilderness lore or creature lore), Track.

Class Skills
- Animal Empathy (Cha), Climb (Str), Craft (Int), Creature Lore (Int), Handle Animal (Cha), Hide (Dex), Intimidate (Wis), Jump (Str), Knowledge (nature) (Int),Listen (Wis), Move Silently (Dex), Profession (Wis), Ride (Dex), Search (Int), Spot (Wis), Swim (Str), Use Rope (Dex), Wilderness Lore (Wis).
Skill Points at Each Level: 4 + Int modifier.

Class Features

Exotic Weapon Proficiency: Monster hunters receive Exotic Weapon Proficiency as a bonus feat at 3rd, 6th, and 9th level. This is typically used to learn some sort of specialized weapon for subduing creatures.

Favored Monster (Ex): At 1st level, a monster hunter may select a favored monster type (for example, aberrations or magical beasts). Humanoids may not be selected as a type, but an individual humanoid species may. Dragons and outsiders may not be selected in an Iron Kingdoms campaign. This is a creature type that the monster hunter is more familiar with; having gained a greater insight into its habits, mannerisms, and combat techniques. They gain a +1 bonus to Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Wilderness Lore checks versus a creature of that type. This bonus also applies to damage rolls, though ranged attacks only gain the bonus when within 30 feet. This ability stacks with a ranger’s favored enemy or other similar abilities.

At 5th and 10th levels, the monster hunter may select a new favored monster type, and his previous bonuses rise by an additional +1.

Improved Tracking (Ex): Monster hunters are accomplished trackers and receive several bonuses to their tracking ability. At 1st level they receive a +1 competence bonus to all Track rolls (not just those versus their favored monster type). At 3rd level they receive an additional +1 bonus to all Track rolls, and they also gain the scent special quality when tracking creatures of their favored type. Scent grants a +10 synergy bonus to all Track rolls, though this is reduced by -2 for every hour after the trail grows cold and an additional -2 per hour of rain (this supersedes how scent functions in MM).

At 6th level they receive an additional +1 bonus to all Track rolls, and the penalty for tracking while moving at full speed drops to -2 (as opposed to -5) when tracking creatures of their favored type. At 10th level they receive an additional +1, and are now no longer affected by spells such as pass without trace and similar abilities when tracking monsters of their favored type; this final manifestation of improved tracking is a supernatural ability.

Fearless (Ex): At 7th level a monster hunter is no longer affected by extraordinary, supernatural, or spell-like abilities that invoke fear that are caused by creatures with a CR equal to or less than twice the character’s monster hunter levels (thus, a 7th-level monster hunter would still be affected by fear-causing effects of CR 15 creatures and above). They are still affected by fear causing spells as normal.

Penetrating Blow (Ex): When fighting a creature of his favored type, a monster hunter may make a strike that exploits the creature’s weaknesses, causing extra damage. At 4th level it adds 1d4+1 damage; at 8th level the damage rises to 1d6+2. This ability only affects one melee attack per round, and its use must be declared before that attack is made; if the attack misses, the ability cannot be used again until the next round. This ability may not be used versus constructs, elements, ooze, undead, or other creatures lacking a living metabolism.

Skilled Trapper (Ex): A monster hunter becomes very skilled in the construction and use of mechanical traps for hunting purposes. These are typically the types of traps one builds on the job to ensnare or injure a creature. A monster hunter may create simple traps at one fourth the standard cost and amount of time. They may create moderately complex traps at half the cost and time. Complex traps still require full time and financial expenditure. Furthermore, they gain a +4 competency bonus to all skill checks involved in the creation of such a trap (typically restricted to Craft checks).

---

Gear and Traps

Because of the special nature of what they do and the perils involved, most monster hunters come to rely on gear and traps to a great extent. Listed here are some examples of gear and traps that monster hunters might use in their adventures. Do note that availability on items such as these is extremely limited; in many cases these might be custom made items that the monster hunter had requisitioned personally.

Gear

Trapper’s Kit: A compact kit containing tools good for making traps. Includes: collapsible shovel, hand drill, collapsible saw, utility knife, 15 feet of wire (30 gauge), 15 feet of wire (18 gauge), flint and tinderbox, oil (6 oz), corrosive acid (3 oz, 6d6 dam/round), 15 feet of wire, putty (5 oz), ball, charcoal stick (for marking things), 4 candles, half leather-
Monster Hunter Prestige Class

Net Launcher: Basically a crossbow-like contraption fitted to launch a net at an opponent. Treat as a normal net, but range is increased to 25 feet, and a 3-pound load time is added to the total time of the net. Weight: 2 lbs. Cost: 700 gp.

Slip Dagger: This is a harness that is attached to the inside of the forearm. When the hand is jerked appropriately, a dagger slides down from a hidden sheath into the user's hand. This allows the user to draw the dagger as a free action. Wearing the apparatus incurs a penalty of -2 to all Dex checks using that hand. Were someone clever enough to craft a small pistol, this harness could conceivably be customized to fit that as well. Weight: 1 lb. Cost: 600 gp.

Sleep Gas: A gray chalky stick that looks like a candle, when lit this item releases a gas that puts creatures to sleep. The gas fills a 10-foot by 10-foot area within 3 rounds, though this will disperse within 1 round with even a mild wind. All breathing creatures within the affected area must save versus poison (DC 18) or suffer initial damage of 1 temporary Constitution and become unconscious as secondary damage. Affected creatures will sleep for 10d6 minutes, unless physically roused. Prematurely wakened creatures are groggy and suffer a -4 penalty to all skill checks, attack rolls, AC, and Reflex saves; if they rest (sit still), they must make another poison save or fall back asleep. Weight: 0.2 lbs. per stick. Cost: 200 gp per stick.

Tearjerk: Tearjerk is a volatile alchemical liquid that immediately turns into a gray vapor as soon as it comes in contact with air. It is kept in small vials that are usually thrown against a hard surface to release the substance within. The gas will fill a 20-foot by 20-foot area within 5 rounds. All creatures exposed to it with olfactory or visual sensory organs suffer -6 to all skill checks and attack rolls. Spellcasters attempting to cast spells that require a verbal component suffer a 50% chance of spell failure due to coughing and hacking. Those that succeed at a Fortitude save (DC 25) suffer only half of those effects. Tasks that require extended vocal activity (such as singing) become impossible. Tasks requiring precise vision (like reading small text) become negh impossi, except perhaps in limited bursts. These penalties fade at a rate of -2 (-10% for spell failure) per half-hour. Weight: 0.2 lb. per vial. Cost: 500 gp per vial.

Launching Flares: These standard flares are designed to be launched into the air via an alchemical propellant. They are conical little devices with a rod attached to them that sticks into the ground. A wick hangs from the bottom that will burn down in two rounds when lit. Some versions will launch themselves when a string is pulled, making them useful as alarms when paired with a tripwire. Flares have an upward range of 1200 feet and emit enough light to be seen for approximately 2 miles in clear night visibility, half that in daylight (only with clear line of sight, in either case).

Flares may be used as impromptu weapons, but they are quite clumsy. Because it can only be loosely aimed, the flare makes its own attack roll at +5 ranging with a range increment of 20 feet (low because they tend to sidewind too much to be effective at a great distance). A creature struck by a flare suffers 2d4 fire damage; additionally, there is a 10% chance per point of damage done that the flare becomes wedged (either in the creature’s armor or body itself). A wedged flare does an additional 1d4 fire damage per round for three rounds. Weight: 1 lb. per flare. Cost: 150 gp per flare.

Hot Grease: A slippery alchemical oil substance that burns like all hell when it comes in contact with the skin. A typical dose (15 oz.) will cover one 5-foot by 5-foot area. Anyone walking through it must make a Reflex save (DC 15) or fall to the ground; a -2 penalty is assessed to the roll for each increment of 10 above the creature’s base speed it is traveling. Creatures that fall on the substance suffer 1d4 damage per round (maximum 5 rounds) unless they are able to wash the substance off (note that it doesn’t burn literally; no fire damage). It has no effect on objects. Note: Leaving spilled objects all over the ground makes this even more fun; impose a -2 to the Reflex save roll, and the spikes attack at +8 melee (as if a trap, basically) doing 1d3 damage. Weight: 1 lb. per canister. Cost: 200 gp per canister.

Ferret and Hunter’s Musk: Though it may sound like the name of a tawdry romance novel, this is an old hunter’s trick. The hunter spends time collecting a few vials of his own sweat, which he dumps all over a trained ferret that is let loose on the trail. Because of the ferret’s own heavy smell, it must be kept freshly washed (most hunters go through this trouble because ferrets are such reliable creatures for these purposes). The idea is to throw creatures staking you off of your trail. A following creature must make a Wisdom check (DC 20) or follow the new trail. Note that this can result in a dead ferret.

Weight: Approx 1 lb. Cost: 150 gp for a trained ferret, but it requires food and TLC.

Traps

- Swinging Log Trap: A log suspended in the air, set to fly down and strike all creatures within a certain area when triggered. CR 1: +8 melee (3d6); Search (DC 20); Disable Device (DC 18). Note: Affects all characters within designated area of effect (usually 10 feet by 10 feet).
- Swinging Log Trap (spiked): A version of the above, but with spikes all over the log. CR 2: +10 melee (6d6); Search (DC 20); Disable Device (DC 20).
- Lasso Trap: A rope lasso that typically slips shut over the foot when the trapped area is stepped on. CR 1; +12 melee (special); Search (DC 20); Disable Device (DC 18). Note: Instead of doing damage, the affected creature must make an opposed Strength check versus Str 30. If it fails, it's swept up into the air (suffering 1d4 damage) and is considered helpless until it cuts itself free (may take damage from falling). A creature that succeeds at the Strength check is considered flat-footed until it cuts the rope; if it attempts to move from its current location, it must make another opposed Strength check.

Blast Trap: This is a simple but deadly trap, consisting of a keg of alchemical blasting powder set to be triggered, usually by a tripwire. CR 6; +15 ranged (8d6 fire, -2d6 per five feet of distance from blast); Search (DC 20); Disable Device (DC 24). Note: There is a time delay of 1d4 rounds as the wick burns down. Additionally, affected characters may make a Reflex save for half damage. A keg of blasting powder usually runs between 200–300 gp.

Steel Jaws: A classic used by hunters across the continent, this is a large metal circle lined with steel “teeth” that clamps shut when the pressure plate in the center is triggered (clamping down like a jaw basically). They are usually tethered or chained to a fixed object to prevent escape. CR 2; +15 melee (3d6); Search (DC 18); Disable Device (DC 20). Note: Creatures caught in such a trap may attempt to pry it open by making an opposed Strength check versus Str 30; failing such a check results in an additional 1d4 damage (the jaw is normally opened by means of a crank that is removed when the trap is set). A creature that manages to free the trap from its tether may move with it attached, but if it has an entrapped foot, it may only move at one-fourth of its base movement score and suffers damage of 1 hp per hour of movement.

Alternately, creatures may sever their own ensnared fins should they possess the means; to do so a creature must inflict upon itself 25% of its total HP in damage. This is similar to a coup de grace, so no attack roll is necessary; however, a Will save (DC 20) is. A creature with a severed foot moves at one-fourth of its base movement score.

Such traps may come in different sizes; this listing is for a trap designed for Medium-size creatures. Additional sizes may be created with the following attack, damage, and Str values:
- Tiny (+7 melee, 1d6, Str 20), Small (+10 melee, 2d6, Str 25), Large (+20 melee, 6d6, Str 40).

Set Gun Trap: This is a simple trap whereby the hunter sets a gun to go off in a certain direction, usually when a tripwire is pulled. Any gun may be used, so long as there is someplace to set it (it usually must be lashed in place). The range on such an attack is almost always considered point blank. CR 3; +10 ranged (damage per weapon); Search (DC 20); Disable Device (DC 22).

---

Blighted Trollkin (see page 35)

This surly fellow played too rough and had to be separated from the rest of his draconian pals.
Cosmology & Infernals

The study of cosmology is in its infancy in the Iron Kingdoms, and researchers do not have a good grasp on how the worlds relate to each other. Despite this ignorance, there are many fanciful theories and self-proclaimed experts. It doesn't help that those with the best grasp on the truth are infernals, dabbles in dark arts who are feared and distrusted by their colleagues.

There is no concept of “planes” in the Iron Kingdoms, nor have wizards had the chance to dabble in planar travel. Outsiders are exceptionally rare on Caen and travelers from other worlds virtually unknown. It is possible the world of Caen is quite isolated from other worlds or surrounded by some thick membrane which makes travel there difficult. Among the educated there is the recent theory of “realms,” discreet pockets of reality somehow connected but separated by more than geographical distance.

Infernal Realms

The gods are not alone in desiring the souls of the living to provide soldiers for their armies. Nor is Urcaen the only realm beyond Caen. There are far worse realms separated at greater distance, home to alien creatures of strange cultures and dark appetites. These are Infernals, and they are all diabolical to the core, at least by human notions of morality.

Infernal is a blanket term used to refer to all evil outsiders with an interest in Caen. Infernals have played an active behind-the-scenes role in events on Caen for millennia. They are suspected to have played a hand in humanity’s learning the arcane art of wizardry and also in the successful rebellion against the Orgoth. There are even unsubstantiated rumors that the gods of the Orgoth were exceptionally powerful infernals.

Currency of Souls

It is suspected the Infernals have some terrible long-range plan in mind for Caen. Their short-term goals are simple: to acquire as many souls as they can. Infernals are not interested in tempting people to sins or punishing evil doers in the afterlife. Their only goal is the capture of souls by any means.

Unlike the gods, Infernals cannot create souls. Even the gods can only do so with great difficulty and monumental investment of power. Infernals must capture or acquire souls by other means, which accounts for their interest in mortals.

Souls are one of the only forms of currency in the realms beyond Caen. Infernals use souls in many of the same ways the gods do, albeit their methods are far different. Souls or parts of souls can be turned into warriors in the infernal realms. Infernals do this against the will of those they capture, warping the nature of their captured souls into dark and perverted echoes of their former selves. These enslaved creatures become cannon fodder in the battles they wage. Powerful souls (such as high-level adventurers) create yet more powerful soldiers.

Any person killed by an Infernal will have a mark placed upon their soul that will prevent it from traveling to Urcaen. The soul will become lost either here on Caen or between worlds, easy prey for Infernals. The same mark is placed on the souls of those killed in sacrificial ceremonies when summoning an Infernal, unless the victim is specially protected. For example, paladins and clerics are automatically protected, as are those shielded via protection from evil. Some particularly pure individuals are also inherently protected from marking.

Those who make pacts with Infernals and promise their souls of their own free will also receive the mark. It is said particularly skilled infernalists can sometimes negotiate the souls of other people, such as their offspring or others dependent upon them. Infernalists may avoid the mark for a time, but even skilled practitioners inevitably sacrifice a bit of their own essence to further their trade; the art is minimizing this whilst maximizing benefits.

The ability to mark the souls of those they have killed is one of the primary reasons Infernals enjoy being summoned to Caen. There is no question they are unspeakably vile and evil creatures. Even their origins among alien realms do not justify their thirst for blood, nor the great joy they derive from stealing the souls of those in their clutches. The more intellectual among them are just as fond of mental abuse. Yet in the final analysis all of these deeds are for the purpose of acquiring souls to warp into soldiers for their endless battles.

Nonokrion Order

Infernal societies are termed orders, although their relationships with one another are unclear. The group with which Iron Kingdoms infernalists have the most dealings is the Nonokrion Order. There are five known strata within the Nonokrion Order, but only three have dealings with the mortals of Caen: executors, curators, and myrmidons.

Infernal Strata

Magnus are the rulers of the Nonokrion Order, three in number. They are collectively referred to as the Magnate Tritorum. Virtually nothing is known of these Infernals except that their power is godlike.

Architects are collectively known as the Cadre Architectia, and these are the Infernals who execute the plans of the Magnate Tritorum. They are nine in number, and are presumed to be similar in power to demigods. No mortals have direct contact with the architects or magnus, so little is known of them.

Executors are exceptionally powerful Infernals held responsible for soul quotas. These noble Infernals are eighty-one in number and can command lesser ranks with impunity. Only the most powerful infernals can attempt negotiations with executors, and doing so carries great risk. Executors have spent millennia at the trade, and are wiser than even the sagas of humanity. Executors prefer to delegate transactions to lower ranking infernals and rarely involve themselves directly. They are frequently portrayed as faceless spectral beings and may disguise their true form.

Curators are the strata most commonly contacted by infernalists. Collectively titled the Curate Procursaria, there are 6,561 of these Infernals, and they do the majority of the work for the order. This includes one-on-one negotiations for souls. Although noted for their intellect and powers of persuasion, curators are well prepared to defend themselves in battle, with formidable supernatural powers. Curators appear as humanoid entities, often with white skin, little or no hair, and odd deformities such as extra fingers, bone spurs, unfeathered jaws, fine pointed teeth, and lidless eyes.

Myrmidons (frequently termed "enforcers") are the lowest strata of Infernals. These are brutal warriors with a rapacious appetite for violence. Myrmidons arise from the captured and tortured souls of mortals, shaped into deadly creatures by curators or higher infernals. The strength of myrmidons is dependent upon their former power in life, as well as whether they derive from a complete soul or simply a fraction of one. It is suspected some myrmidons can grow in power, perhaps related to the slaying of mortals.

Myrmidons are the easiest Infernals to summon, although doing so frequently requires negotiations with a curator. They vary widely in appearance, depending upon the imagination of the higher rank Infernal that created them. Some appear deceptively humanoid, others nightmarish and beastly. Their mental capacities are similarly varied, although most are smarter than they look.

Infernal Mortality

Although it is not known with absolute certainty, infernalists claim that true Infernals can be destroyed, although they are ageless and immortal. Since they do not have a soul themselves, they are gone forever once destroyed. It is unknown how or if these Infernals are replaced, nor is there any process of birth or creation understood. Myrmidons and other enforcers that are shaped from immortal souls are not destroyed completely when defeated, but can be harvested again and shaped once more into their previous form or a new one. For this reason most Infernal wars take place among the enforcers, which are recyclable. True Infernals are cautious and will do anything in their power to prevent their own destruction.
Playable Races

Dwarves

Dwarven characters are identical to those in the PH, except where noted below.

Favored Class: Their favored class for purposes of multi-classing is fighter—per the PH. Multiclassed fighters are common among dwarvenkind.

Names: Dwarves have names such as Golrick, Rolgor, Buren, and Damal.

Dwarven Traits

Except as noted dwarves of Rhul are identical to dwarves in the PH as regards ability scores, skill bonuses, and other abilities. The primary difference is that the dwarves of the Iron Kingdoms have shorter lifespans, living to only about 160 years.

Oathbound: Dwarves of lawful alignment (the vast majority) take their oaths extremely seriously, and they have been conditioned over millennia to obey them. For that reason, an oath taken by a dwarf is treated as if a geas or quest spell has been cast on them, with all the repercussions. Dwarves of non-lawful alignment do not have this restriction, although they may pretend to. The term "oathbreaker" is one of the worst possible insults to a dwarf.

Automatic Languages: Rhulic, Cygnaran (spoken). Bonus Languages: Cygnaran (written), Llaelac, Khadoran, Dolk-Rhul.

Elves

Elven characters are identical to those in the PH, except where noted below.

Favored Class: Their favored class for purposes of multi-classing is wizard—per the PH. Elven wizards are still relatively common, but are expected to be cautious with the use of their powers and are somewhat wary of human wizards and what they consider to be incautious use of mechanics. Elves have a particular knack for divination, and diviner specialists are well respected. Many elven wizards only study the arcane arts for a few levels before going on to another class.

Names: Elves have names such as Avroos, Glysson, and Reclusin.

Elven Traits

Except as noted, the elves of Ios are identical to elves in the PH as regards ability scores, skill bonuses, and other abilities. The primary difference is the elves of the Iron Kingdoms have shorter lifespans, living to only about 320 years.

Other Races

Gobbers

Alignment: Most gobbers are neutral, although they can be of any alignment. They are inclined towards chaos over law. The bogrin are even more often of chaotic alignment.

Religion: Gobbers are not generally pious, and clerics are rare among them. The majority worship the same entity revered by many trollkin and ogre—Rugarm, a primal mother goddess named Dwimm. Bogrin usually worship the Devourer Wurm. Particularly civilized gobbers who have spent their lives among humans may turn to Morrow, Thamar, or other human gods, although they will find prejudices among many members of those faiths. There are also some gobbers who are known to have turned to Cyris. Those bogrin who are subjects to Lord Tork worship him.

Names: Both gobbers and bohrin enjoy exceptionally long and complex names, but generally abbreviate them to a single syllable except on formal occasions. For example: Borkanhekkana ("Bork") or Gommaganagatol ("Gomm")

Favored Class: Rogue. Multiclassed boggers and bogrin do not count their rogue class when determining whether they suffer an XP penalty.

Other Classes: Fighters are common, although inclined to use stealth and ambush to avoid straight-up fights. Gobber sorcerers occasionally garner the fear and respect of their tribes, although they are rare among the bogrin. Rangers do quite well and are noted for their skill at archery. While gobber barbarians are rare, they can be found among bogrin tribes. There is nothing prohibiting gobbers from other classes (such as wizards), but they do not arise in their own cultures and would need to apprentice themselves to a mentor from another race.
Playable Races

Goblin Traits

Goblin: +2 Dex, -2 Str. Common goblins are nimble but not as strong as some races.

Boglin: +2 Dex, -2 Int, -2 Cha. Boglins are stronger than goblins and just as nimble, but are not as clever, well-educated, or variable.

Small: As small creatures goblin PCs gain a +1 size bonus to AC, a +1 size bonus to attack rolls, and a +4 size bonus to Hide. They must use smaller weapons than humans use, and carrying capacity is 3/4 that of Medium-size creatures.

Speed: Base Speed is 20 ft.

Low-light vision: Goblins can see twice as far as humans in starlight, moonlight, torchlight, or similar conditions.

Camouflage: Goblins can blend into their surroundings by subtle changes in skin color. This grants a +4 circumstance bonus to their checks, adjusted down depending on how much skin is covered (+4 for virtually naked, +3 for 25% covered, +2 for half covered, and +1 if 75% covered).

+1 racial bonus to saving throws vs. poison.

Alchemy and Hide are always considered class skills for all goblin PCs.

+A racial bonus on Alchemy checks.

Goblins have an innate curiosity and love of strange substances and experimenting with their effects. They do not automatically have marks at Alchemy without training, however.

+A racial bonus to Escape Artist and Move Silently checks. Goblins are taught from infancy the ways of stealth and wriggling loose from capture.

Automatic Languages: Molgur (Goblinish dialect), Cygnaran (spoken only), Bonus Languages Cygnaran (written), Olde Khadaran.

Boglin Traits (in addition to goblin traits listed above)

Immune to the dangers of natural extreme cold or heat. This makes them perfectly comfortable in any temperature from 0 to 110° F, suffering none of the regular exposure consequences. +2 racial bonus to Climb checks.

Boglins do not gain the +2 bonus to Escape Artist like regular goblins.

Boglins have a -2 racial penalty to Bluff and Diplomacy checks.

---

Trollkin

Alignment: Trollkin tend towards lawful alignments, although there is a fair amount of deviation, especially among adventuring types. Most trollkin also tend towards neutral as regards good or evil.

Religion: Trollkin vary in the degree of their religious fervor just about as much as humans do, although they don't typically worship Morrow, Menthos, or any of the other gods typically revered by humans. In ancient days the trollkin revered the Devourer Wurm (as most other trolls do today) and to a lesser extent Dhunia, although in recent centuries, as they have become more sedentary and civilized, they have focused more on Dhunia. The presence of the Devourer is, however, still felt in some longer-standing traditions, and among some of the more violent and chaotic trollkin he is revered greatly. There are no trollkin churches, as worship is a private practice among them and religious ceremonies are the purview of shamans.

Names: Most trollkin have relatively short names with hard consonants (eg Balasar, Drugi, Gerik, etc.). Occasionally, trollkin will adopt a surname, usually the name of their kith or krewl. favoured class: Fighter. Multi-classed trollkin do not count their fighter class when determining whether they suffer an XP penalty.

Other Classes: Although they are not restricted from any class, monks, paladins, druids, or wizards are quite rare among trollkin, as they have no place in their society. Rogues, barbarians, and clerics are uncommon. Trollkin sorcerers are albinos from birth who receive many blue tattoos as they mature. Trollkin bards are keepers of legend and very important for preserving the tales of each bloodline, though they differ from typical bards somewhat.

Trollkin Traits

+2 to Str, +4 to Con, and -2 to Dex and Cha. Trollkin have abundant fortitude and great strength, but they lack in both physical and social gracefulness.

Medium-size: As such, trollkin neither gain nor suffer any bonuses or penalties for their size.

Speed: Base speed is 30 ft.

Vision: Trollkin gain darkvision 30 ft.

Improved Healing: Trollkin do not have regeneration. Instead, they heal twice the normal rate. If they faint consci-
Playable Races

Trollkin

Folkways: While resting, this healing rate rises to three times the normal rate. They also receive a +4 racial bonus to save versus poison and +2 versus disease. Additionally, they still regenerate lost limbs, though at a reduced rate. A severed limb that is surgically attached will heal within 1d6+1 days. A lost limb will regrow within 2d20+30 days. They die as normal if reduced to -10 hp.

Resistance: Trollkin gain poison resistance 4 and +4 racial bonus to save versus poison and +2 versus disease. Trollkin are resistant to physical toxins and pathogens.

Toughness: All trollkin are able to shrug subdual damage off easily. The first X points of subdual damage (where X equals the trollkin’s Constitution modifier) from any attack is ignored. This ability protects against subdual damage from hazardous environments as well, although in these cases damage may never be reduced below 1.

Automatic Languages:
Molgur (Molgur-trul dialect, spoken only), Cygnaran (spoken only), Bonus Languages: Molgur (written), Cygnaran (written), Khadoran.

Level Adjustment +1: Trollkin are slightly more powerful than most races.

Ogrun

Most adventuring ogrun are "bokur" (which means "unsworn"), not having sworn fealty to a Korune. Being bokur is acceptable for young ogrun learning their place in the world and honing their skills, but they are expected to eventually choose a leader or cause; those who remain bokur past their youth lose status among their kin and are treated with condescension by sworn ogrun.

Alignment: Any alignment is allowed, but ogrun are usually chaotic. Those from the northern mountains are most commonly chaotic good, while those from the Schardel Islands are more frequently chaotic evil. Regardless of chaotic alignment, ogrun are fiercely loyal to friends and causes once they commit themselves. It should be noted an oath of fealty does not change their chaotic nature, as they can still choose to change or disobey certain orders, but always in the best interests of their sworn lord. Even when disobeying, their loyalty is unwavering and they will seek to further their lord’s cause by whatever means they think is best.

Religion: The majority of mainland ogrun worship Dhunia, a mother goddess credited with the creation of Caen as well as the ogrun, gobber, and trollkin races. A number also worship the Devoicer Warum, although only outside of Rhiul. Most ogrun of the Schardel Islands worship Lord Toruk. Some rare few ogrun who live closely with the dwarves have come to revere the Great Fathers, while there have been isolated instances of ogrun in human communities turning to Morrow or Thamar.

Names: Most ogrun names are short and have hard consonants (e.g., Kolak, Tokol, etc.).

Favored Class: Barbarian. Multiclassed ogrun do not count their barbarian class when determining whether they suffer an XP penalty.

Other Classes: Fighters are common in ogrun communities, although usually outnumbered by barbarians. Rangers are also relatively common, particularly in the northern tribes. Ogrun are naturally spiritual and their clerics and shaman are well respected, but their lower wisdom makes them less powerful than non-ogrun peers. Sorcerers are never born among ogrun and they have no natural arcane aptitude for wizardry. There are few ogrun bards, rogues are rare due to their size, and there are virtually no ogrun druids, monks, or paladins.

Ogrun Traits

+4 Str, -2 Int, -2 Wis. Ogrun are exceptionally strong, but are generally not well-educated and have poor natural intuition and analytical capability.

Large As Large creatures ogrun PCs have a -1 size penalty to AC and a -1 size penalty to attack rolls. They may use Large weapons in one hand or Huge weapons in two hands. They have twice the carrying capacity compared to Medium-sized creatures (not to mention having a hard time with human doorways and furniture).

Speed: Base speed is 40 ft.

Intimidate is considered a class skill for all ogrun PCs.

Ogrun are proficient in any one type of polearm regardless of class (usually halberd). Young ogrun are always trained in the use of the traditional weapon of their family. +2 natural bonus to AC, as their skin is as tough as leather.
+2 racial bonus to Intimidate checks and +2 racial bonus to any Craft checks involving working metal.

Korune: Once an ogre swears fealty to a leader or a cause, they are virtually incapable of betraying those oaths (with similar penalties as lesser geas if they do). They can choose to disobey specific orders but in all other ways must act in the best interest of the sworn leader or cause.

Automatic Languages: Molgur (Molgur-og dialect, spoken only), Rhulric (if from Rhul, spoken only) or Cygnaran (spoken only); Bonus Languages: Molgur (written), Cygnaran (written), Rhulric (written), Khadoran.

Bonus Hit Die: Ogrun start with +1 Hit Die at 1st-level.
Level Adjustment: +1: Ogrun are slightly more powerful and gain levels more slowly than other races of Carn.

Racial Feat

Stronghammer Smith [General]
This racial feat is not possessed by all ogruns, but many smiths of this race learn techniques allowing them to take advantage of their great strength.

Prerequisite: Str 15+, Int 8+, ogrun only.
Benefit: This feat allows an ogrun to apply his Strength modifier to any Craft (blacksmithing, armorsmithing, or weapon smithing) check. The Strength modifier is cumulative with any Intelligence bonus or penalty and is also cumulative with the racial bonus to metal Craft checks.

Special: This feat can only be learned by ogrun.

Nyss

Alignment: Any alignment can be found, but the Nyss tend towards chaotic alignments.

Religion: Nyss are tightly bound to the faith of the god of winter, Nyssor. Little is known of this faith outside the four tribes, and even the elves of Ios do not fully understand the details of Nyss religion. There is rumored to have been a traitor shad which was corrupted to the worship of Thanat long ago, but little is known of these renegades. Few Nyss worship other gods.

Favored Class: Ranger. Multiclassed: Nyss do not count their ranger class when determining whether they suffer an XP penalty.

Other Classes: All martial classes except paladin are common among the Nyss, with barbarians outnumbering fighters. Clerics are highly respected, albeit disadvantaged compared to non-Nyss peers due to lower Wisdom. Sorcerers are born with some frequency among the Nyss, and they're treated with special esteem. Bards are uncommon, but all shards have a few lore keepers among them, maintaining an oral tradition (bands are rarely literate unless they can convince a willing cleric to teach them). Rogues are uncommon in favor of rangers, although the Nyss do have a knack for stealth. There are some Nyss who choose to become druids, still paying homage to Nyssor, but lack the prestige of clerics since they are not as closely linked to Nyssor. Monks and wizards are unknown among the Nyss.

Nyss Traits

+2 Dexterity, -2 Wisdom: Nyss are nimble and graceful, but tend to be somewhat short-sighted.

Medium-size: As such, Nyss suffer no bonuses or penalties due to size.

Speed: Base speed is 30 ft.

Nyss are resistant to the effects of cold weather and do not suffer penalties from cold conditions until 40°F lower than normal. For example, they experience cold conditions at 0°F and extreme cold at temperatures of -40°F and below.

Nyss are particularly vulnerable to hot weather when wearing any armor greater than studded leather (or equivalent), suffering as if enduring hot or extreme heat conditions at 20°F lower than others. For example, they experience hot conditions in temperatures greater than 70°F (instead of 90°F) and extreme heat in temperatures greater than 90°F (instead of 110°F).

+4 racial saving throw bonus versus cold-based spell attacks.
-2 racial saving throw penalty versus fire or heat-based attacks.

Wilderness Lore is considered a class skill for all Nyss PCs.

+2 racial bonus to Listen, Spot, and Hide skill checks.

Proficient with Nyss claymore and longbow: Nyss train with these ancestral weapons from early on. Because of its special design, the Weapon Finesse feat may be applied to the Nyss claymore (a two-handed weapon).

Social Isolation: Nyss characters suffer a -2 penalty on any social skills (Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate, etc.) when talking to non-Nyss due to unfamiliarity with customs and foreign manners. This penalty is increased to -4 when dealing with the elves of Ios. At the GM’s option this penalty can be reduced after prolonged time living outside the homeland.

Automatic Languages: Arrie (spoken only), Bonus Languages: Arrie (spoken only), Cygnaran (spoken only), Shyr (spoken only).
For generations now, men have feared the shadows of our realm, told tales of things that go bump in the dark, and covered behind locked doors through the cold, lonely hours of night. I have stalked the wide expanses of Immoren now for several years, hunting out these shadows and sounds, and I have come to one conclusion: we're all going to need some bigger locks."

—Professor Viktor Pendrake

Follow the famous Cygmaro scholar, Professor Viktor Pendrake, as he takes you deep into the darkest recesses of the Iron Kingdoms, seeking out terrors unimaginable. Pendrake has catalogued over 80 fascinating finds—creatures mundane and legendary, spectral and mechanical. The Monsternomicon is naturally a great tool for terrifying your players, and its abundance of fascinating details are sure to fire up any Iron Kingdoms™ campaign.

• A wealth of monstrous inhabitants of the Iron Kingdoms™ are described in rich and incredible detail. Each creature receives no less than two fact-filled pages, including adventure hooks, awesome creature lore, and more, to give your adventures a running start!

• Each monster is brought to life with gritty and terrifying illustrations by the award-winning Privateer Press art team!

• Explore a thorough appendix, including prestige classes, new game rules, and information on the playable races of the Iron Kingdoms.

• The Monsternomicon™ is the ultimate bestiary for any d20 campaign, covering a wide variety of fearsome creatures to challenge players of all levels.